Guam avoids severe coral bleaching predicted for this year

HAGATNA, Guam (AP)—Officials say vulnerable coral reefs on Guam have not experienced severe bleaching that was predicted for this year.

Pacific Daily News reported that the Guam Bureau of Statistics and Plans says a mass coral bleaching event indicated by satellite measurements of sea surface temperatures did not occur.

Officials say recent stormy weather including Super Typhoon Hagibis may have contributed to the coral's survival through cloud cover that cooled surface water temperatures.

Officials say storms and wind are also likely to have created cooling water movement.

The National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration's Coral Reef Watch program indicated in July that the island would likely experience significant bleaching, which often precedes coral death.

A coral reef resilience coordinator with the statistics and plans bureau says Guam has "so far been very lucky."

OPD files 15th motion in sex abuse of minor case

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Office of the Public Defender has asked the Superior Court to compel the Office of the Attorney General to give the suspect in a sex abuse case the employment/personnel records of the police sergeant who arrested him.

Assistant public defender Heather M. Zona, counsel for defendant Joseph Serman Epina, said the materials being sought bear on the integrity of the investigation in the case as a whole, which concerns the validity of this case altogether.

» Defense counsel seeks personnel records of a cop who arrested defendant

In a motion filed Friday, Zona asked the court to subpoena the CNMI Office of Personnel Management to produce certain personnel records of Sgt. Catherine Pangelinan, who is now the evidence custodian of the Department of Public Safety.

In the alternative, Zona asked that Pangelinan's personnel records be given to the court for review.

The motion is Epina's 15th filed in court. It will be heard on Nov. 13, 2019, at 10am.

Zona is seeking materials pertaining to Pangelinan such as any evidence concerning complaints of dishonesty, excessive or unnecessary force or violence, aggressive conduct, racial or class prejudice or bias, improper police tactics, false statements in reports, incomplete statements in reports, false claims of probable cause to search or arrest, fabrication of charges and/or evidence, and false testimony.

Zona also wants to know why the sergeant's assignment was changed from detective in the DPS Criminal Investigation Unit to evidence custodian.

Zona said recent news reports suggest that the DPS evidence locker is plagued by problems, including improper security procedures, that threaten the authenticity of the materials kept there.

Zona said to the extent Pangelinan was transferred to the position of evidence custodian due to concerns about her work as a detective (or even as the evidence custodian), that information would be relevant to her credibility.

Zona said Epina's expected defense is based, in part, on Pangelinan's incompetence and misconduct, including her flawed and biased investigation of this case, as well as her lack of training.

Zona said Pangelinan had testified that then-assistant attorney general Teri Tenorio, who was originally assigned to Epina's case, criticized her job performance.

Zona said Pangelinan testified that she was so angry to hear of Tenorio's complaints that she (Pangelinan) threw out her notes in the case.

Subsequently, Zona said, Pangelinan was transferred to the evidence locker, where it appears she is now evidence custodian.

The second amended information charged the 45-year-old Epina with sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree and disturbing the peace. He allegedly sexually abused a 12-year-old girl on March 12, 2016.

When former prosecutor Elizabeth Weintraub left OAG in 2017, the case was assigned to Tenorio. Last February, Tenorio also left the OAG.

The case is being handled by Associate Judge Joseph N. Camacho.

CUC to inspect power meters at IPI resort, CPA, others

Electrical engineers of the Commonwealth Utilities Corp. will be inspecting the power meters of major government and commercial customers, including that of the Imperial Pacific Resort in Garapan.

The intent is to make sure that the meters are working correctly and ensure that CUC is capturing correct revenue streams from its high-end electric power users.

CUC executive director Gary P. Camacho informed CUC directors during Thursday's board meeting that their electrical engineers will also inspect the Commonwealth Ports Authority's Francisco C. Ada/Saipan International Airport, Kanoa Resort, Triple J's Comfort

Homes, and Triple J's Sandy Beach Homes.

He did not indicate the dates as to when the inspections will occur.

Camacho said in an effort to address CUC's technical and non-technical losses along its power distribution system, their electrical engineers will work with their billing department on evaluating CUC's ability to capture correct billing data of government and commercial electric customers.

He said their electrical engineers will re-evaluate 370 primary metering devices.

He said CUC electrical engineers will verify the Potential Transformers/Current Transformers ratio of primary metering devices and determine whether the devices are capturing the actual power usage of government and commercial customers. (Ferdie de la Torre)

NMC students learn the ropes of marketing through garden

Ed's Bonita Park on Upper Navy Hill will become the centerpiece of a project of business major students of the Northern Marianas College's Marketing Management class, who will use the park as a hands-on tool to learn marketing concepts.

As part of their overall marketing project, the group must find ways to promote the botanical garden to various markets. They started off by meeting park manager Michael Manglona last Sept. 20.

As part of the course, students will work as teams to identify unique ways to market the park to various ethnic groups such as the Chinese market, the local market, the Korean market, the Japanese market, and an overall concept for educational purposes.

Manglona thanked NMC assistant professor Barbara Hunter for bringing up the idea to help promote local businesses tion 83 on Oct. 11, 2019, effectively declaring a national climate crisis and announcing the island nation's intent to direct current and future RMI governments to prioritize the issue of climate change.

The resolution noted the "extreme vulnerability and special circumstances faced by low-lying coral atoll nations," such as the Marshall Islands, which are faced with a projected rise in sea levels that will ultimately result in a "significant or total loss of land mass."

"Our parliament has officially declared a national climate crisis. As one of only four low-lying coral atoll nations in the world, the failure of the international community to adequately respond to the global climate crisis of its own making holds particularly grave consequences," Marshallese president Dr. Hilda C. Heine noted in a social media post.

"The [RMI] is calling for the international community to consider ways to respond to and support the extreme vulnerability and special circumstances faced by the low-lying coral atoll nations of the world," the resolution added. It urged other governments to respond to a recent call by the United Nations to submit updated 2040 decarbonization strategies in line with the Paris Climate Accord, a United Nations pact that calls for the financial support for efforts toward combatting climate change.

The resolution cited the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's special report, which projects global warming of 1.5 degrees Celsius.

According to the report, by 2100, global mean sea level rise is projected to be around 0.1 meters, with global warming of 1.5 degrees Celsius to over 2 degrees Celsius.

"A slower rate of sea level rise enables greater opportunities for adaptation in the human and ecological systems of small islands, low-lying coastal areas, and deltas," the report noted.

"A reduction of 0.1 meters in global sea level rise implies that up to 10 million fewer people would be exposed to related risks," the report further noted, citing population numbers for 2010.

"Increasing warming amplifies the exposure of small islands, low-lying coastal areas and deltas to the risks associated with sea level rise for many human and ecological systems, including increased saltwater intrusion, flooding and damage to infrastructure," the report further noted.

RMI has been reporting increased incidences of the intrusion of high tides, called king tides, with ocean inundation creeping higher and higher each year.

Mariana Islands board chair Gloria Cavanagh.

In an interview last week, Cavanagh also revealed that the renovation at the Pacific Islands Club in San Antonio is now 90% complete.

Cavanagh is general manager of PIC, which is the sister company of Coral Ocean Point Golf Resort in Koblerville.

Super Typhoon Yutu wreaked havoc on Saipan in October 2018, causing major damage at PIC and COP. COP has been closed since Yutu's onslaught.

It was reported last May that COP has finally started the process of renovation, which involves tearing down the damaged parts.

Cavanagh said that COP was scheduled to re-open this March but, because of challenges with manpower, its reopening was moved back.

Cavanagh can't give a specific date on COP's re-opening because they don't have the schedule yet.

"But they are making headway and the demolition is done already and now they are starting to build," she said.

Cavanagh said that, right now, they are working with the number of construction workers they have on the island.

With respect to PIC, Cavanagh said that renovation work on about 10% of the resort has yet to be completed.

"We still have to put the tiles on the roof," she said, adding that they would probably complete the renovation by the first or second quarter of next year.

Last Dec. 21, PIC re-opened almost two months after sustaining major damage.

Cavanagh earlier estimated that repairing and renovating PIC would cost between $5 million and $7 million.

dwelling was totally consumed by the fire. A total of six households were affected.

The American Red Cross-NMI Chapter's Disaster Action Team members—Jack Amirez, Claudine Atalig, and Richard Defan—were able to assist clients immediately, providing them with emergency assistance for food shelter and clothing.

In total, eight individuals were assisted. "Thankfully nobody was hurt during this incident," said Amirez. "Material possessions can always be replaced [but] lives can't—and that what matters."

The Department of Public Safety has yet to release a report about the incident. The cause of the blaze has yet to be determined.

The American Red Cross urges the community to take steps to minimize the risk of a fire from happening in their homes. John Hirsh, executive director of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, said the aid agency continues to install free smoke alarms in the community.

"We encourage everyone who does not have one [smoke alarms] in their homes to contact the local Red Cross chapter to avail of the program," he said.

This month, the American Red Cross-NMI Chapter, in collaboration with the CNMI Department of Fire and Emergency Medical Services, will be canvassing neighborhoods on all three islands to install free smoke alarms, said J.D. Tenorio, disaster program manager of the American Red Cross.

For more information on how to avail of the free smoke alarms, call 234-3459.

"We are grateful for our volunteers and the continued support of generous donors and community members who with their help, we are able to assist victims of disaster by turning compassion into action," said Tenorio. (Saipan Tribune)

INSULAR

finally be interest on the high court to reconsider the Insular Cases.

"The Insular Cases and the doctrine of territorial incorporation have rightly been criticized for creating a second-class status for residents of so-called 'unincorporated' territories like Puerto Rico, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands based on the racist view that Caribbean and Pacific islands acquired by the United States after the Spanish American War were populated by 'alien races' and 'savage people,'" said Neil Weare, president of Equally American, a nonprofit that seeks to advance equality and civil rights for the nearly 4 million American citizens living in U.S. territories.

Equally American filed an amicus brief in Tuesday's case, calling on the Supreme Court to overrule the Insular Cases.

"The Supreme Court should overrule its shameful rulings in the Insular Cases this term, just as it overruled its shameful ruling in the Japanese internment case, Korematsu v. United States, last term," Weare said.

During oral argument last week in Ramos v. Louisiana, a case involving whether the Constitution guarantees a right to a unanimous jury verdict, Justice Stephen Breyer raised concerns that the Supreme Court "might have to revise" the Insular Cases. In the same argument, Justice Samuel Alito raised whether the high court "should brush aside" what he characterized as "the old Insular Cases that reflect attitudes of the day." Both justices may have been thinking ahead to this Tuesday's consolidated argument in Financial Oversight and Management Board v. Aurelius Investment, LLC, where the First Circuit acknowledged earlier this year that the territorial incorporation doctrine created by the Insular Cases "hovers like a dark cloud."

Significantly, parties on both sides of the dispute now argue that the Supreme Court should overrule the Insular Cases. On one side, the government of Puerto Rico has expressly argued for overruling the Insular Cases, even as it supports the constitutionality of the board. On the other side, Unión de Trabajadores de la Industria Eléctrica y Riego believes the board is unconstitutional, but also strongly argues the Insular Cases should be overruled. UTIER's counsel, Jessica Mendez Colberg, a young Puerto Rican attorney making her first argument before the Supreme Court, will have 10 minutes on Tuesday to make her case to the Supreme Court.

Notably, the United States now also expressly disavows any reliance on the Insular Cases to support the constitutionality of the board, even as it relied upon them extensively before the district court. Other parties continue to rely on the Insular Cases to argue in favor of the board's constitutionality.

In addition to Equally American, a number of other amicus parties have also filed briefs before the Supreme Court calling on it to use this opportunity to overrule the Insular Cases, including the American Civil Liberties Union and ACLU of Puerto Rico; scholars of constitutional law and legal history; former federal and local judges, including former chief justice of the Guam Supreme Court B.J. Cruz, former chief judge for the Federal District Court in Puerto Rico José A. Fusté, and former U.S. Virgin Island judges Henry Feuerzeig and Soraya Diase Coffelt; and the U.S. Virgin Islands Bar Association.

Equally American, and these other amicus parties, take no position on the merits of the dispute.

Tuesday's argument will take place at 10am, with a transcript of the oral argument available shortly after the argument concludes. A decision is not expected until later this year or early next year. (PR)

$785K awarded for high-priority energy projects

CONTRIBUTED PHOTO
The CNMI Office of Grants Management, together with CNMI's Office of Insular Affairs field representative Harry Blanco and Rota municipal government leaders recently discussed projects funded by the Department of the Interior-OIA programs and potential project ideas for upcoming grant opportunities.

The CNMI has been awarded a total of $785,381 in fiscal year 2019 grant funding through the Office of Insular Affairs' Energizing Insular Community program.

Assistant Secretary for Insular and International Affairs Doug Domenech told Gov. Ralph DLG Torres about the grant award last Thursday.

The EIC funding will be awarded to the Office of the Governor for the following high priority energy projects within the Commonwealth:

■ $222,988 for the Commonwealth Utilities Corp.'s Battery Energy Storage System Feasibility Study for Rota.

■ $160,000 for the Rota Aquaponics Program Photovoltaic System.

■ $152,393 for the CNMI

Strategic Energy Plan Update.

■ $250,000 for Photovoltaic Lighting for Tinian Public Buildings and Pathways.

"Energy projects are a critical part of our administration's goals towards energy efficiency on all three islands, and we are very grateful to [Domenech] and OIA for funding these priorities. The projects will help improve the lives of residents on Rota and Tinian, while also allowing us to plan for bigger energy priorities in the future. Lt. Gov. ## Juan Pan featured in AMP youth program

Once again, the American Memorial Park and Pacific Historic Parks are hosting the annual program, "Icons of World War II." The program leads children in hands on learning about iconic World War II figures.

Last year featured Rosie the Riveter, the servicemen who left home to fight in the war, and the locals who were drafted as Marine scouts. This year the program will feature two men who also played a significant role in the CNMI islands' history: Herman "Pan" Guerrero of Herman's Bakery and Haruji Matsue, also known as the Sugar King.

On Saturday, Oct. 19, from 8:30am to 2:30pm, the park welcomes youth to participate in the first session, called "Herman 'Pan' Guerrero: A Baker in War." Guerrero established a business during a time of war and hardship, opening up his bakery 75 years ago, in 1944. Participants will learn about Guerrero and how he built his business in such challenging times. In partnership with Herman's Bakery and the Guerrero family, participants will be able to visit the bakery and go on an exciting tour of the original establishment in Dandan.

The park invites children ages 5-12 to join them for this fun and educational opportunity to taste a piece of Saipan's history. ## Reviving the canoe culture

The Humanities Council, in celebration of the month of October as Humanities Month, will be hosting the event "Reviving and Promoting Canoe Culture in the Marianas" on Oct. 30, 6pm, at the American Memorial Park Visitor Center Theater.

Pete Perez, executive director of 500 Sails, will be talking about his work to revive the canoe culture by building traditional sakman (canoe).

Perez, who co-founded the Sakman Chamorro Inc. in 2006, is part of the movement to "restore the Chamorro maritime tradition."

"[It goes] back to Commodore George Anson, who sailed here and observed, back in the 1700s. They saw all these Chamorro canoes when their big ship came into our islands, and one of their men drew it to scale," council executive director Leo Pangelinan explained.

The drawing made its way into history books.

"Pete did more research and started to build based on that drawing. He has a process for building so they can build multiple canoes at one time."

500 Sails has a boat building warehouse in Lower Base.

Aside from Perez' talk, the Humanities Council is also leading the monthlong celebration of the humanities through educational programs.

Upcoming events include the Sengebau Poetry Competition on Oct. 15; the Humanitini featuring Microchild on Oct. 16; the Governor's Humanities Awards on Oct. 24; and the Amalawa Mwaliliil Refaluwasch! on Oct. 29.

'DHS exec's resignation is another troubling sign'

REPORTER

U.S. President Donald J. Trump announced via tweet his plan to soon name a replacement for acting U.S. Department of Homeland Security secretary Kevin McAleenan, who has stepped down from the post.

Trump, in a two-part tweet on Oct. 11, announced McAleenan's resignation, while also adding that he would be announcing a replacement this week.

While Delegate Gregorio

Kilili C. Sablan (Ind-MP) believes this would have very minimal effect on the CNMI's CW visa program, he noted that the resignation of the fourth person to lead the department under Trump is "another troubling sign."

"And his departure will only add to the confusion for a department where there are chronically too many leadership vacancies and positions held by unconfirmed, 'acting' officials," Sablan added. The department oversees border security, immigration services, counter-terrorism, cybersecurity and emergency management, among others," he told Saipan Tribune.

The Torres administration is not too concerned about this personnel movement, besides saying they are aware of the matter.

"...We don't see this personnel change affecting our ongoing discussions with DHS and [U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services] regarding the [foreign worker] program. Gov. [Ralph DLG] Torres has made great strides in maintaining a close and constructive dialogue with the White House and DHS officials on our unique labor needs, and this administration intends to continue the work to advocate for all of our businesses, their employees, and our whole community because we understand how critical this is," said press secretary Kevin Bautista. "This administration remains committed to increasing our U.S. workforce, while also making sure businesses remain viable and successful."

Take the Garapan Heritage Trail challenge!

Are you up for a walking tour around Garapan?

The village is not merely the commercial and urban center of Saipan. Discover and learn more about the past by visiting 20 historical and cultural sites in Garapan, which has played a significant role in the island's history for over three millennia.

The sites are part of the Garapan Heritage Trail tour launched last Friday by the NMI Humanities Council.

Representatives of tour companies, the education sector, and the media hopped on a chartered bus to check out and experience the sites. Humanities Council executive director Leo Pangelinan emphasized, though, that the tour is best experienced on foot since some of the sites are in narrow passages inaccessible to buses.

"This Garapan Heritage Trail tour is intended to be a walking tour," Pangelinan said. "The council, we've gone out, our staff have read history books, as well as try to corroborate the story with the elders to make sure that we are explaining the history of the sites correctly."

The tour last Friday started at the American Memorial Park, with lead ranger Brooke Nevitt talking about the history of, and what programs they have at the AMP. Other sites visited include the Carolinian Utt, the Nam-bô Pier, the Catholic Church Bell Tower, the Sugar Train Locomotive and the Matsue Statue at the Sugar King Park, Saipan Jinja, and the old Japanese Jail.

It also included a trip to the NMI Museum of History and Culture, which, from 1926 to 1944, served the public as a Japanese hospital.

Pangelinan hinted that more sites could be added to the 20 sites that are currently part of the heritage trail.

"Some of the unofficial historians on our tour today were pointing out some other historical sites in Garapan, as we were driving along, that are worthy of recognition and explanation," Pangelinan said. The council has also not included historic sites that are on private property.

"Maybe Phase 2 of our project is to put those on the map and explain to tourists that, if they want to access those places, here are the owners. This is how you can get permission to get on the property and look at, whether it's a cave [or] remnants of a building," Pangelinan added.

A digital map, as well as additional information about the Garapan Heritage Trail can be accessed via garapanheritage-trail.com.

Printed maps are also available through the Marianas Visitors Authority and the Humanities Council. At the moment, information is available in five languages: English, Japanese, Korean, Chinese, and Russian.

IN RULING THAT FEDERAL COURT HAS JURISDICTION OVER HILLBROOM LAWSUIT

Judge finds that Israel, Lujan offer no other argument

By FERGIE DE LA TORRE
REPORTER

U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona has ruled that lawyers Barry J. Israel and David J. Lujan have offered no persuasive argument why the federal court does not have jurisdiction over the lawsuit filed against them by their former client, Junior Larry Hillbloom.

In denying Israel's and Lujan's motion to dismiss Hillbloom's lawsuit, Manglona said Hillbloom does not need to establish extrinsic fraud to invoke federal jurisdiction.

Hillbloom satisfied his burden of establishing federal question jurisdiction over his Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act claims, and diversity jurisdiction over the remaining claims, said Manglona in a written order Thursday last week that contains detailed reasoning for the decision.

The judge issued an oral ruling of the motion to dismiss after hearing the parties' arguments last Sept. 19.

Israel, through counsel Theodore Frank, moved to dismiss the lawsuit. Lujan joined in the motion.

Israel and Lujan assert that extrinsic fraud is the sole basis of federal jurisdiction over this case and now that discovery is complete, the absence of extrinsic fraud evidence warrants a dismissal.

Israel and Lujan claim that, without evidence of extrinsic fraud, Hillbloom's RICO claim fails and without RICO claim, there is no federal jurisdiction.

Defendants further declared, without citing to the record, that the District Court "ruled extrinsic fraud is necessary for federal...jurisdiction over plaintiff's claims."

At the hearing, Israel's counsel directed Manglona to a sentence in her decision and order denying Lujan and Israel's motion for judgment on the pleading to support this contention.

Manglona disagreed with the defendants' interpretation of that decision.

In her written order, Manglona said nowhere did she rule that extrinsic fraud was required for jurisdiction. Rather, Manglona said, she considered the defendants' arguments that the exercise of jurisdiction over this case would involve the improper review of a Guam Superior Court order in violation of the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution and the Rooker-Fieldman doctrine.

The full faith and credit clause refers to the duties that states within the U.S. have to respect the "public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state."

Rooker-Fieldman refers to a legal principle that a federal court "do not have jurisdiction to review decisions of state courts or claims inextricably intertwined with an earlier state-court judgment."

Manglona said she addressed the role of extrinsic fraud but did not hold that it was a determinative factor in rejecting both defenses.

First, as to the full faith and credit cause, Manglona said she held that "the issues the Guam court decided are not identical to the issues in this lawsuit, and therefore the third prong of the res judicata test is not satisfied."

Manglona said defendants have not presented any argument why a lack of evidence of extrinsic fraud would change that conclusion.

Res judicata refers to a legal doctrine that bars litigation in a subsequent action of any claims that were raised or could have been raised in the prior action.

Hillbloom is suing Israel, Lujan, and his former trustee, Keith Waibel, alleging mismanagement of approximately $90 million he inherited as heir of Larry Lee Hillblom, a co-founder and former owner of DHL Worldwide Express.

In two separate lawsuits, Hillbloom alleges that the defendants increased their contingency fee from 38% to 56% through fraud and breaches of their fiduciary duties.

He also alleges that defendants fraudulently backdated the 56% retainer, submitted a false report to the trust protector, and paid unsubstantiated costs from the trust funds.

Hillbloom's first lawsuit was only against Lujan. In his second complaint, he sued Israel and Waibel. Both cases allege nearly the same facts.

Hillbloom, however, did not bring a claim of negligence against Lujan. The court consolidated the two cases.

Hillbloom is suing for legal malpractice, negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud and RICO violation.

Hillbloom is one of the four DNA-proven children of Hillblom. His name is spelled differently from that of Hillblom.

Hillblom died in a sea-plane crash off Anatahan waters on a flight from Pagan to Saipan on May 21, 1995, leaving behind an estate worth approximately $550 million. The bodies of the pilot and a business partner were found, but Hillblom's body was never recovered.

Paseo de Marianas is newest NMI park

The government designated yesterday the soon-to-be opened Paseo de Marianas in Garapan as a Commonwealth Park in recognition of its "significant social and economic benefits" to the CNMI. In a directive issued yesterday, Gov. Juan N. Babauta said these benefits include "an enhanced destination for visitors that translates into greater opportunities for business, a wonderful venue for community cultural and social activities, and an improved drainage system for the Garapan district that protects the environment on which our economy depends." The government said the entire project would generate at least $200 million in revenue within the four-year period of the revitalization.

Babauta OKs $5.2M for Saipan

Gov. Juan N. Babauta approved a bill yesterday appropriating a total of $5.2 million for Saipan, including $1 million for the CNMI Water Task Force. In signing House Local Bill 14-08, Babauta said the funds—as identified by the Saipan legislative delegation—would be sourced from local poker and pachinko revenues. Babauta, in his transmittal letter to the delegation, said that $1 million of the funding would be prioritized for the task force to ensure a 24-hour pressurized water supply on Saipan by next year. The bill was introduced by Reps. Arnold Palacios and Ramon Tebuteb. In his letter, the governor said that many other capital improvement projects are also important "but difficult choices, however, must be made and some projects will have to wait until such time [that] funds are made available."

Taiwanese TV show to shoot on Saipan

A Taiwanese television producer and a media executive flew to Saipan this week for onsite inspection in preparation for a three-day filming here later this month. Ed Ho, TTV producer, and James Lin, managing director of IDSON Communication Co. Ltd., said they found Saipan to be "an ideal place" for filming for a prime-time TV game show, which they translated as "Happy Go, Go." "Taiwanese people really love the ocean, the sea, the beach. He said that the show's hosts, contestants, and staff, who love to travel, would enjoy Saipan.

'Urban revitalization' eyed for Plumeria housing

Commonwealth Development Authority board chair Tom Glen Quitugua said it is "a worthwhile idea" to consider an urban revitalization approach when pursuing the government's Plumeria Estate project. Quitugua said urban revitalization means modernizing or improving on existing facilities. As proposed by the Babauta administration, Plumeria Estate will rise on a 13-hectare lot in Koblerville, which currently does not have electricity, water, sewer, and road systems. Quitugua said the Plumeria project can make use of existing sites, such as the rundown MIHA housing at the back of Garapan Elementary School and the Northern Marianas Housing Corp.

Safety of skaters at new park examined

Some members of the Rotary Club of Saipan have expressed concern about the safety of youngsters who are using the club's latest project, a Skate Park, which has yet to officially open. The newly constructed $15,000 project is to be inaugurated sometime this month. Rotarian Dennis Yoshimoto, who co-chairs the skate park project along with Laurie Peterka, said he would seriously look into this matter. He said the facility is in fact still under construction. They hired skate park specialist John Glaze from Indonesia in August to oversee the construction of the project. The Rotary took on the project after realizing the great risks children face when skating on public roads.

CUC gets proposals from 2 firms for overhaul work

The Commonwealth Utilities Corp. has received proposals from two companies that are interested in overhauling two engines at Power Plant 1 in Lower Base that were left undone by a previous contractor. CUC executive director Antonio Muña told Saipan Tribune that they received two proposals and that one is much higher than the other. CUC put out in the latter part of July the emergency Request for Proposals for the overhaul work on power engines no. 5 and 7. CUC is looking at generating 22 megawatts from these engines when overhaul work is completed.

Make it harder for the FBI to snoop on Americans' conversations with foreigners

When Congress reauthorized a controversial program last year that allows the government to scoop up the emails and video chats of foreigners abroad with possible connections to terrorism, it included provisions to safeguard the privacy of Americans on the other end of those communications.

But a recently declassified opinion from the special court that oversees intelligence activities suggests that the FBI didn't take that mandate seriously enough. Congress needs to ensure that the bureau is following the law.

Section 702 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act allows the government to collect the electronic communications of foreigners living abroad. The program has been described by members of Congress, including former Senate Intelligence Committee Chairwoman Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.), as a valuable counterterrorism tool.

But in today's electronically interconnected world, monitoring the communications of foreign "targets" inevitably collects some communications involving Americans.

To protect privacy rights, the current version of the law requires that government agencies keep records of how often they "query" (or search) the huge database of intercepted communications for information about "U.S. persons"—citizens and lawful permanent residents. Section 702 also requires that the queries be "conducted in a manner consistent with the 4th Amendment."

But in an opinion made public last week, Judge James Boasberg of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court determined a year ago that the FBI hadn't fully adhered to the privacy safeguards. For example, he cited several instances in which the FBI searched for information about large groups of U.S. persons without satisfying the requirement that the search be "reasonably likely to return foreign-intelligence information or evidence of crime." Some of the searches involved using search terms apparently associated with people who worked for the FBI—presumably, an attempt to use foreign-intelligence information for personnel review.

Until checked by the court, the FBI seemed to have taken Congress' mandates to protect Americans' privacy as mere suggestions. Congress needs to demand that FBI Director Christopher A. Wray demonstrate that his agents aren't engaging in fishing expeditions in the sea of intercepted communications involving Americans.

The law may also need to be changed. Although the FBI must obtain a court order to read the contents of some communications turned up in a computer search under

REACTIONS TO THE DECISION TO WITHDRAW U.S. TROOPS FROM SYRIA

NBA air-balls response to China controversy

The NBA says it won't compromise on its values, even as the league makes it clear it has none.

As you've no doubt heard, Houston Rockets general manager Daryl Morey tweeted his support for the protesters in Hong Kong. Almost instantly, the Chinese government and Chinese businesses erupted in outrage. The NBA, the Rockets, Morey and various players rushed to apologize or express regret for offending millions of Chinese basketball fans. The NBA's statement, particularly the Chinese version, was loathsome in its obsequious groveling.

A few days later, NBA commissioner Adam Silver held a press conference in Tokyo, hoping to put out the firestorm. Responding to China's cancellation of some NBA exhibition games in protest, Silver seemed like he was standing his ground.

"I think it's unfortunate," Silver said of the cancelled games. "But if that's the consequences of us adhering to our values, we still feel it's critically important we adhere to those values. ... We are not apologizing for Daryl exercising his freedom of expression."

Silver did express regret, however, that so many in China, including "millions and millions of our fans" were "upset." He said that while he wasn't endorsing what Morey tweeted, he would defend Morey's right to tweet it.

Of course, the tweet remains deleted.

Days later, fans carrying pro-Hong Kong signs were ejected from an NBA exhibition game in Philadelphia. At a Washington Wizards game, pro-Hong Kong signs were confiscated by security. American reporters have been told they couldn't ask players about the China controversy. A CNN reporter was instructed "Basketball questions only" when she tried to talk to two Rockets players. The league later apologized, which it seems to be getting good at.

In other words, the NBA is eager to seem as if it's in favor of free expression while curtailing expression as much as possible. The strategy has had some success. A CNN headline declared, "NBA chief Adam Silver says profit can't come before the league's principles," and was accurate to the extent that it's sort of what Silver said. It's not clear it's what he believes.

The mere fact that this controversy has become about free expression is a victory for the NBA. Saying, in effect, "I disagree with what you say, but I'll defend to the death your right to say it," has always been a popular way for cowards to seem brave.

The problem is that free expression is just one of the values the NBA claims to stand for. In Silver's statement, he waxed poetic about the principle the league is famous for marketing to the world: diversity. "One of the enduring strengths of the NBA is our diversity—of views, backgrounds, ethnicities, genders and religions," the statement read.

That's great. But the Chinese government has herded more than a million Muslim Uighurs into "re-education camps" while paving over their cemeteries and tearing down their mosques. The same league that pulled its all-star game out of Charlotte, N.C., over a contentious transgender bathroom law has no problem partnering with a country that fights diversity at the point of a gun.

As first reported in Slate, the NBA even has a training facility in Urumqi, the capital of Xinjiang, the epicenter of China's cultural genocide project.

China's lack of commitment to diversity and equality doesn't end there. The country essentially practices Jim Crow with Chinese characteristics, as Chairman Mao might have said. If you aren't ethnic Han, or if you don't speak Mandarin, you're a second-class citizen with little to no access to certain jobs and universities.

What Silver doesn't understand—or deliberately ignores—is that free expression isn't a stand-alone value. It's part of a larger whole, which includes democracy, the rule of law and the full suite of human rights. China opposes the whole package. Or, to be more accurate, the Chinese government does. Which is why it's against freedom in Hong Kong.

It's clever for Silver to talk about not wanting to offend "millions and millions" of Chinese fans. That plays well to the ears of woke Americans who think offending people tests the limits of free speech. But Twitter is blocked in China, which means none of those fans saw the tweet in the first place.

What they did see was the orchestrated propaganda campaign from the Chinese government and its rich clients—a group that includes the NBA.

NBA's deference to China in the wake of controversy shows how money trumps freedom of speech

China's clash with the National Basketball Association over a short tweet reveals an unfortunate truth. Contrary to our best American hopes that China's success with market capitalism would weaken that government's chokehold on free speech, it appears to have done more to seduce us.

That's because lots of money hangs in the balance and, as much as the NBA may be the most prominent American business being targeted by Chinese authorities, it is hardly alone.

Apple, for example, late Wednesday removed a smartphone app used by pro-democracy protesters in Hong Kong in the tech giant's latest surrender to China's autocratic government. The app, HKmap.live, allows protesters and others to track Hong Kong police movements through crowdsourced information.

The Beijing government also complained via its state-run news outlet, People's Daily, that Apple allowed a song advocating Hong Kong independence to be available on its platforms. The government doesn't like too much chatter about independence, whether spoken or sung.

The government also has banned some fashion brands and suggestive T-shirts. Recent crackdowns have included Winnie the Pooh. Too bad. It wasn't his idea to be used as a political symbol by satirists because of his alleged resemblance to President Xi Jinping.

But none of those episodes has received as much attention as the message that Daryl Morey, general manager of the Houston Rockets, tweeted on Oct. 4 in support of anti-Beijing protesters who have jammed Hong Kong streets for the past four months: "Fight for Freedom. Stand with Hong Kong."

The tweet was quickly deleted and the NBA league announced its "regret" that many Chinese, particularly those who live outside Hong Kong, were offended by the tweet. Since the Chinese government doesn't allow free press or free speech, it is very hard to say how many were delighted by the message.

The NBA's apologetic response struck many critics as downright cowardly in light of the NBA's high tolerance for political dissent in past cases. Los Angeles Lakers superstar LeBron James has routinely traded insult tweets with President Donald Trump.

Two of the league's most successful coaches, Steve Kerr and Gregg Popovich, have spoken out on gun safety and immigration issues, but avoided taking sides in the China controversy. Yet Trump did not wait to criticize both and some others in the NBA for "pandering" to China.

Yet, the president—who is outspoken on just about every other issue on earth and beyond, including trade and tariff negotiations—was uncharacteristically mute on human rights in Hong Kong.

The president, like NBA owners and China's leaders, has his eye on the bottom line. With the world's largest population and one of its biggest economies, China will not be ignored, especially by the NBA, which says that country's professional basketball fans number about twice the U.S. population. The NBA also has a $15 billion deal with a Chinese livestreaming company.

A big dent was put in that revenue stream when Chinese businesses and government retaliated against the objectionable tweet by canceling events, tearing down posters and declining to air the big exhibition game between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Brooklyn Nets on CCTV, the Chinese national television network.

Money talks. But what I find even more troubling is the apparent erosion of resistance to China's efforts to force Americans to censor themselves.

Deadspin published a memo from a senior ESPN news executive telling anchors to avoid political discussions about China and Hong Kong, and instead focus on the related basketball issues. CNN reporter Christina Macfarlane was interrupted by a Rockets media official when she asked Rockets stars James Harden and Russell Westbrook in a news conference whether the recent events had changed their thoughts about speaking freely on political issues. Macfarlane herself was quickly shut down for asking a question that was insufficiently related to basketball. She later received an apology.

The sad truth of all this fuss, ethically speaking, is that Morey was right and the Chinese government was wrong. The demonstrators in Hong Kong deserve the right to free speech and were promised more democracy when the city was handed over by the British than Beijing has been willing to grant.

There was a time when we in the free world hoped that a taste of free market capitalism would bring enough rewards to all Chinese people and that they would crave more freedoms. Instead, China is now so economically huge—and growing—that its leaders have been content to bully their way around the block, and the globe.

The result for the past 40 years has been a mixture of free market capitalism and authoritarian governance that displays the worst lessons of capitalism. Essentially, everybody has their price, so take the profits and shut up about your political leadership.

That's a pretty persuasive message. All it requires is an absence of moral courage.

Matt Lauer's right to defend himself is an important part of #MeToo

In the wake of the #MeToo movement, "he said, she said," is quickly becoming, "she said, he cringed and remained silent." Another variation is, "she said, he apologized profusely and then resigned."

This would describe Al Franken, who did what he thought was the honorable thing even though many of his former colleagues now regret forcing him out of office (except for former Democratic presidential candidate Kirsten Gillibrand, emphasis on "former").

But some men—including, as of this week, Matt Lauer—have decided to change the paradigm and started to speak out after being accused of sexual misconduct. There was Brett Kavanaugh, who passionately defended himself against sexual assault allegations lodged on the eve of his confirmation. There is Pennsylvania State Sen. Daylin Leach, who has filed defamation actions against several parties (including my paper) for making or reporting accusations against him (what I call the, "she said, he sued" dynamic.)

Lauer is the most recent example of an accused male refusing to go gentle into that good night a la Dylan Thomas. The former broadcast star, whose meteoric rise included a stint here in Philadelphia and who became a household name as a long-running "Today" show anchor, was fired after stories of his extramarital affairs became public two years ago. At the time, Lauer remained fairly silent, retreating into a family bubble as he tried to save his marriage and protect his children. The marriage ended, and so did Lauer's run as a public figure.

That was true until this past week, when accusations of rape exploded in anticipation of the release of Pulitzer Prize-winner Ronan Farrow's new book, "Catch and Kill: Lies, Spies, and a Conspiracy to Protect Predators," which details the reporting that launched the #MeToo movement. As dramatic as his retreat from public spotlight seemed in 2017, that was the tone of re-emergence this Wednesday when Lauer categorically denied accusations of rape made by Brooke Nevils, a former colleague at NBC. Lauer came out swinging in a public statement on the matter:

"It is alleged that an extramarital, but consensual, sexual encounter I have previously admitted having, was in fact an assault. It is categorically false, ignores the facts, and defies common sense."

In other words, Matt Lauer is speaking out in his own defense, something that many men have been too afraid to do for fear of being called sexist or misogynistic or other, more indelicate terms that have entered the lexicon thanks to a certain occupant of the White House.

#MeToo has spread the message that women need to find their voices and speak out when they feel they have been abused. As someone who works with female victims of domestic violence and who grew up with women who had been abused by their partners or relatives and never dared open their mouths, I celebrate any movement that encourages victims to tell their "truths"—as long as they are indeed truths. Unfortunately, one woman's vague, long-buried "fact" can be another man's defamatory, life-destroying fiction.

That is why it is as important to listen to the men who say, "I did not do this, this was not what happened," as it is not to shame women into silence or dismiss out of hand their uncorroborated accounts. We have to find that middle point between the two pendulum extremes of "excusing all men" and "believing all women."

I think that what Matt Lauer is doing is an important step. While his moral code, which apparently allows for serial adultery, is clearly flawed, that does not mean he should wear the label of "rapist" for the rest of his natural life, if he indeed did not commit rape.

Whenever people are given an opportunity to defend themselves against unconfirmed allegations, whether through lawsuits, public interviews, or impassioned statements in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee, we guarantee that our social and legal systems will be as fair as humanly possible. Guaranteeing that right for men, in this #MeToo era, is not another way of silencing women. It is the only way to make sure the truth is spoken and heard.

If Section 702 were completely consistent with the Fourth Amendment, investigators would need to obtain a warrant based on probable cause before they even searched for any American's communications, as Sen. Ron Wyden (D-Ore.) has proposed. Congress needs to revisit that idea.

Brexit divorce talks between UK and EU go down to the wire

LONDON (AP)—British Prime Minister Boris Johnson told Cabinet colleagues that it will require a “significant amount of work” to strike a Brexit deal with the European Union, amid signs of progress in last-minute talks but also deep-seated skepticism about the chances of an agreement.

Britain is due to leave the 28-nation bloc on Oct. 31, and attempts to find a deal have foundered over plans for keeping an open border between EU member Ireland and the U.K.’s Northern Ireland.

The challenge of maintaining an invisible border—something that underpinned both the local economy and the region’s peace deal—has dominated Brexit discussions for three years, ever since U.K. voters chose in 2016 to leave the EU.

But negotiations intensified last week after Johnson

UK Brexit secretary Stephen Barclay, right, shakes hands with European Union chief Brexit negotiator Michel Barnier before their meeting at the European Commission headquarters in Brussels, Friday, Oct. 11, 2019.

Sunday that his party was unlikely to support any deal agreed upon by Johnson.

Lawmaker Nigel Dodds of Northern Ireland’s Democratic Unionist Party—which props up Johnson’s Conservative minority government—has rejected one suggested compromise, in which Northern Ireland stayed in a customs partnership with the EU in order to remove the need for border checks. The DUP strongly opposes any measures that would treat Northern Ireland differently than the rest of the U.K.

But other Brexit supporters signaled they could back such a deal. House of Commons leader Jacob Rees-Mogg, a strong Brexiteer, said a “compromise will inevitably be needed, something even the staunchest Leavers recognize, albeit unwillingly.”

Rees-Mogg told Sky News that the chances of a Brexit agreement were rising.

“I think it’s always difficult to put specific odds on things, but it certainly looks a lot more positive this week than it did last week,” he said.

California power outages highlight economic disparity

When the nation’s largest utility warned customers that it would cut power to nearly 2 million people across Northern California, many rushed out to buy portable generators, knowing the investment could help sustain them during blackouts.

Others had the security of knowing they could rely on solar panels and batteries installed in their homes.

But many families impacted by the blackouts are struggling from paycheck to paycheck and don’t have the luxury of buying backup power.

The blackouts are highlighting a divide in a region with growing income disparity where access to electricity is increasingly available to those who can afford to pay.

Communities in the San Francisco Bay Area are already reeling from economic imbalance as the tech industry has drawn well-off workers to the region, pushing lower- and middle-income families farther away from pricey city centers.

There are 1.7 million people in the Bay Area who don’t have the resources to meet their basic needs, according to Tipping Point, an organization that fights poverty in the region.

Generators and solar panels are the last things low-income families are thinking about during the blackout, said Mary Kuhn, spokeswoman for Catholic Charities East Bay. Many are struggling with lost wages because restaurants or other businesses that pay by the hour temporarily closed.

“They’re facing, what am I going to feed my kids if I can’t cook and this food is spoiled? And how will I feed my kids next week?” Kuhn said.

Meanwhile, solar companies are seeing a spike in interest from customers seeking alternatives for when the power fails.

Sunrun, which leases and sells solar energy systems, said traffic to its web page which explains how to power through blackouts with its solar and battery systems increased 1,500% over the past few days.

Retired firefighter Derek Krause, who lives in Oakland, leases solar panels and a battery from Sunrun for about $150 a month, which includes the cost of electricity.

Krause didn’t realize this week’s power outage had hit his neighborhood because his backup power kicked in when his neighbors’ lights turned off. PG&E’s promise to cut power more frequently was one of the reasons he decided to install the system in February.

“Having taught the public about self-sustainability during emergencies, it was important to me,” Krause said.

and Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar said they could see a “pathway” to a divorce agreement that avoids a no-deal Brexit, something economists say would hurt both the U.K. and EU economies.

Both sides say substantial gaps remain and it’s unclear whether they can be bridged in time for an orderly British departure at the end of this month. A crucial EU summit, the last scheduled chance to strike a deal, begins Thursday.

The European Commission’s EU chief negotiator Michel Barnier briefed ambassadors of the remaining 27 countries Sunday. The commission said in a statement that there had been “constructive technical-level” talks with the U.K. but “a lot of work remains to be done.”

It said discussions would continue Monday.

Johnson’s office said he told the Cabinet on Sunday in a conference call “that a pathway to a deal could be seen but that there is still a significant amount of work to get there and we must remain prepared to leave on Oct. 31” even if there is no agreement.

If a Brexit deal is reached, it still needs to be approved by both British and European parliaments. Many British lawmakers—on both pro-Brexit and pro-EU sides of the debate—remain unconvinced.

Opposition Labour Party leader Jeremy Corbyn said

Hunter Biden to step down from Chinese board

NEW YORK (AP)—Facing intense scrutiny from President Donald Trump and his Republican allies, Hunter Biden said Sunday he will step down from the board of directors of a Chinese-backed private equity firm at the end of the month as part of a pledge not to work on behalf of any foreign-owned companies should his father win the presidency.

Biden, the 49-year-old son of Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden, revealed his plan in an internet post written by his attorney, George Mesires, who outlined a defense of the younger Biden’s work in Ukraine and China, which has emerged as one of Trump’s chief lines of attack against Hunter’s father despite no proof of impropriety.

“Hunter makes the following commitment: Under a Biden Administration, Hunter will readily comply with any and all guidelines or standards a President Biden may issue to address purported conflicts of interest, or the appearance of such conflicts, including any restrictions related to overseas business interests. In any event, Hunter will agree not to serve on boards of, or work on behalf of, foreign owned companies,” Mesires wrote.

He continued: “He will continue to keep his father personally uninvolved in his business affairs, while availing himself as necessary and appropriate to the Office of the White House Counsel to help inform his application of the Biden Administration’s guidelines or standards to his business decision-making.”

Joe Biden, speaking to reporters after a union forum in suburban Des Moines, Iowa, said his son did not discuss that decision with him before posting the statement.

“No one has asserted my son did a single thing wrong,” Biden added, pounding his finger into the podium, “except a lying president.”

And Biden promised to bar his family members from occupying any office within the White House and said they won’t “sit in meetings as if they are a Cabinet member.” That was a jab at Trump, who taps daughter Ivanka and her husband, Jared Kushner, as advisers. Biden did not say if his pledge meant that Jill Biden, his wife, would not get the office traditionally assigned to first ladies, should he win.

He further vowed that no one in his family will have “any business relationship with anyone that relates to a foreign corporation or foreign country.”

Hunter Biden’s work overseas sits at the center of the House impeachment inquiry into Trump, who has admitted to asking foreign powers to investigate Hunter Biden’s business dealings abroad.

The White House released a rough transcript of a call in which Trump asks Ukraine’s new president, Volodymyr Zelenskiy, to probe Biden’s family and Ukraine’s role in the 2016 election that put Trump in office. Trump has also encouraged China to dig into Hunter Biden’s work in that country, asserting without evidence that earned $1.5 billion from a “sweetheart” business deal there.

The president’s personal attorney, Rudy Giuliani, is also under increasing scrutiny for his efforts to dig into Hunter Biden’s business background. Late last week, two businessmen involved in Giuliani’s efforts to investigate Hunter Biden’s dealings in Ukraine were charged with federal campaign finance violations.

Still, Republicans reacted to news of Hunter Biden’s decision to step away from the Chinese-backed BHR Equity Investment Fund Management Co. with deep skepticism.

“I think this is just another way to save a flailing campaign that’s going down,” Georgia Rep. Doug Collins, the top Republican on the House Judiciary Committee, said on Fox News Channel’s “Sunday Morning Futures.” “He knows he’s in trouble and this is just another way to try and detract attention

Ambassador to testify no quid pro quo assurance was Trump's

WASHINGTON (AP)—A U.S. ambassador is expected to tell Congress that his text message reassuring another envoy that there was no quid pro quo in their interactions with Ukraine was based solely on what President Donald Trump told him, according to a person familiar with his coming testimony in the impeachment probe.

Gordon Sondland, Trump's hand-picked ambassador to the European Union, is among administration officials being subpoenaed to appear on Capitol Hill this week against the wishes of the White House.

It's the latest test between the legislative and executive branches of government, as the impeachment inquiry by House Democrats deepens.

On Monday, the House panels leading the investigation expect to hear from Fiona Hill, a former top Russia expert at the National Security Council.

Sondland's appearance, set for Thursday, comes after a cache of text messages from top envoys provided a vivid account of their work acting as intermediaries around the time Trump urged Ukraine's new president, Volodymyr Zelenskyy, to start investigations into a company linked to the family of a chief Democratic presidential rival, Joe Biden.

One witness who may not be called before Congress is the still anonymous government whistleblower who touched off the impeachment inquiry. Top Democrats say testimony and evidence coming in from other witnesses, and even the president himself, are backing up the whistleblower's account of what transpired during Trump's July 25 phone call with Zelenskyy. Lawmakers have grown deeply concerned about protecting the person from Trump's threats over the matter and may not wish to risk exposing the whistleblower's identity.

Democratic Rep. Adam Schiff, chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, said Sunday, "We don't need the whistleblower, who wasn't on the call, to tell us what took place during the call. We have the best evidence of that."

Schiff said it "may not be necessary" to reveal the whistleblower's identity as the House gathers evidence. "Our primary interest right now is making sure that that person is protected," he said.

The impeachment inquiry is testing the Constitution's system of checks and balances as the House presses forward with the probe and the White House dismisses it as "illegitimate" without a formal vote of the House to open impeachment proceedings.

In calling for a vote, the White House is trying to press House Democrats who may be politically reluctant to put their names formally behind impeachment. But House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., has resisted those efforts and is unlikely to budge as Congress returns. Democrats say Congress is well within its power as the legislative branch to conduct oversight of the president and it is Republicans, having grown weary of Trump's actions, who may be in the greater political bind over a vote.

Rep. Jim Himes, D-Conn., said Sunday he'd be fine with taking a formal vote, "but it's not required."

"Look, my own opinion is that we ought to just take this off the table because it's such a non-issue, and there's no doubt in my mind that of course if Nancy Pelosi does that she will have the votes and that will pass," Himes said.

Sondland's appearance comes after text messages from top ambassadors described their interactions leading up to Trump's call and the aftermath.

Sondland is set to tell lawmakers that he did understand the administration was offering Zelenskyy a White House visit in exchange for a public statement committing to investigations Trump wanted, according to the person, who demanded anonymity to discuss remarks not yet given.

But Sondland will say he did not know the company being talked about for an investigation, Burisma, was tied to Joe Biden's son, Hunter Biden, the person said. Sondland understood the discussions about combating corruption to be part of a much broader and publicized Trump administration push that was widely shared, the person said.

In the text exchange, the diplomats raised alarm that Trump appeared to up the ante, withholding military aid to Ukraine over the investigation.

Impeachment dominates, but much other work awaits Congress

WASHINGTON (AP)—Impeachment may have leapfrogged to the top of the national agenda, but members of Congress still have their day jobs as legislators, and they're returning to Washington this coming week with mixed hopes of success.

Full Coverage: Trump impeachment inquiry

It's a volatile, difficult-to-predict time in Washington as lawmakers end a two-week break. The notion that President Donald Trump could do much significant dealmaking with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, his impeachment antagonist, could be fanciful, given Trump's impulsiveness and demands for border wall money.

An important trade agreement pact has a pulse. An effort to deal with high prescription drug prices seems stuck.

Pelosi, D-Calif., is aware of the political imperative to avoid looking tied up in impeachment while leaving the rest of the nation's business hanging. At a recent news conference she solicited questions on topics such as trade before turning to impeachment, reminding that the Democratic-controlled House has sent bill after bill to the GOP-led Senate, which has done little else but vote on presidential nominations for months.

Divided government has produced scant results thus far, except for a small-scale budget deal that lawmakers are struggling to put in place. The next few months could prove make or break for high-profile agenda items such as an updated trade agreement with Canada and Mexico, a full slate of spending bills and prescription drug legislation. Pelosi insists impeachment doesn't have to harm the legislative agenda in Washington.

"They have nothing to do with each other," Pelosi said earlier this month. "We have a responsibility to uphold our oath of office, to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. We also have a responsibility to get the job done for the American people."

The atmosphere isn't exactly brimming with optimism. Hopes for a near-term breakthrough on trade, one of the few items on which Pelosi and Republicans are in general alignment, faded after AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka issued a combative warning against a speedy vote on the new North American pact.

On spending, negotiators are trying push through a $1.4 trillion package of agency spending bills to fill in the details of this summer's budget-and-debt accord.

Experienced bargainers such as GOP Sen. Richard

Shelby of Alabama, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, are taking the lead on that but lingering bitterness over the U.S.-Mexico wall fight threatens to again delay a resolution. That's particularly so after Trump's attacked lawmakers' traditional power of the purse by raiding military construction projects to finance wall construction.

Given the uncertainty, lawmakers may end up doing what they do best: Kicking the can down the road.

Months-late enactment of the annual agency appropriations bills is increasingly common in Washington, and it's clear that another temporary government-wide funding bill will be needed when the current one expires in six weeks. Likewise, there's no hard and fast deadline for ratifying an important trade pact with Mexico and Canada that an administration priority.

New Orleans hotel collapse: Search on for a missing worker

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Rescue crews on Sunday searched for a worker missing in the partial collapse of a New Orleans hotel that was under construction, their work proceeding cautiously amid fears about the stability of the structure, authorities said.

Officials declined to say if they have any indication whether the missing worker is alive after Saturday's collapse. New Orleans Fire Chief Tim McConnell said they are treating their work as a rescue mission until they have evidence the missing person is dead along with two other people killed when a large part of the Hard Rock Hotel project crashed down near the city's historic French Quarter.

"Safety is the No. 1 thing. The last thing you want to do when you are trying to rescue somebody is lose someone else," McConnell said at a news conference Sunday.

Several floors of the hotel toppled down Saturday amid blinding dust and flying debris. WWL-TV obtained a viewer's dramatic video of upper floors collapsing Saturday before one side of the building crashed to the street.

New Orleans Mayor LaToya Cantrell told media outlets later Sunday that the body of one of the two dead has been recovered and the coroner's office is working to identify the victim.

Thirty people were injured. Only one remains in the hospital. The mayor visited the man, who had surgery for a leg injury.

"He told me it could have been worse. He wanted to make sure his co-workers were safe. He was envisioning the two who were on the floor with him," Cantrell said.

Crews on Sunday were assembling a 220,000-pound (99,800-kilogram) crane driven into the city overnight to begin the delicate process of removing the large amount of fallen debris, McConnell said.

"Our original estimate to get a crane was two weeks. We got it here in less than 24 hours," McConnell said.

The project's contractor, Citadel Builders LLC, was flying in engineers from Europe to help crews remove debris without risking the life of the missing person or nearby buildings and aid in the investigation, officials said.

Typhoon leaves as many as 33 dead as Japan continues rescue

TOKYO (AP)—Helicopters, boats and thousands of troops were deployed across Japan to rescue people stranded in flooded homes Sunday, as the death toll from a ferocious typhoon climbed to as high as 33. One woman fell to her death as she was being placed inside a rescue helicopter.

Typhoon Hagibis made landfall south of Tokyo on Saturday evening and battered central and northern Japan with torrents of rain and powerful gusts of wind. The typhoon was downgraded to a tropical storm on Sunday.

Public broadcaster NHK said 14 rivers across the nation had flooded, some spilling out in more than one spot.

The Tokyo Fire Department said a woman in her 70s was accidentally dropped 40 meters (131 feet) to the ground while being transported into a rescue helicopter in Iwaki city in Fukushima prefecture, a northern area devastated by the typhoon.

Department officials held a news conference to apolo-

Debris caused by Typhoon Hagibis are left on a street in Motomiya, Fukushima prefecture, Japan Monday, Oct. 14, 2019.

The Tama River, which runs by Tokyo, overflowed its banks, flooding homes and other buildings in the area.

Among the reported deaths were those whose homes were buried in landslides. Other fatalities included people who got swept away by raging rivers.

Early Sunday, Suga said that some 376,000 homes were without electricity, and that 14,000 lacked running water.

Tokyo Electric Power Co. said late Sunday that more than 66,000 homes were still without power. Tohoku Electric Co. said 5,600 homes still lacked electricity, in the northern prefectures of Miyagi, Iwate and Fukushima. Both utilities said they were working to restore power.

Several train services in the Tokyo area resumed early in the morning, while others restarted later.

Ruling party politician Fumio Kishida said the government would do its utmost in rescue operations, including making sure that those who moved to shelters were taken care of.

gize, bowing deeply and long, according to Japanese custom, and acknowledged the woman had not been strapped in properly.

The government's Fire and Disaster Management Agency, which tends to be conservative in its counts, said late Sunday that 14 people died, 11 were missing and 187 were injured as a result of the typhoon. It said 1,283 homes were flooded and 517 were damaged, partially or totally.

Japanese media tallies were higher. Kyodo News agency reported that 33 people died and 19 were missing.

"The major typhoon has caused immense damage far and wide in eastern Japan," government spokesman Yoshihide Suga told reporters.

News footage showed a rescue helicopter hovering in a flooded area in Nagano prefecture where an embankment of the Chikuma River broke, and streams of water were continuing to spread over residential areas. The chopper plucked those stranded on the second floor of a home submerged in muddy waters.

Aerial footage showed tractors at work trying to control the flooding and several people on a rooftop, with one waving a white cloth to get the attention of a helicopter. Nearby was a child's school bag. In another part of Nagano, rows of Japan's prized bullet trains, parked in a facility, were sitting in a pool of water.

A section of the city of Date in Fukushima prefecture was also flooded, with only rooftops of residential homes visible in some areas, and rescuers paddled in boats to get people out. Parts of nearby Miyagi prefecture were also underwater.

PH police chief resigns amid drug allegations

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—The Philippine national police chief resigned on Monday after he faced allegations in a Senate hearing that he intervened as a provincial police chief in 2013 to prevent his officers from being prosecuted for allegedly selling a huge quantity of illegal drugs they had seized.

Gen. Oscar Albayalde said his decision relinquishing his post was accepted by Interior Secretary Eduardo Ano over the weekend but insisted on his innocence, saying he has never been criminally or administratively charged for the alleged irregularity. Albayalde resigned a few weeks before his scheduled retirement on Nov. 8.

Addressing the 190,000-strong police force in the last flag-raising ceremony he led at the national police headquarters, Albayalde ordered the policemen to continue serving the Filipino people well. "Do not let these challenges demoralize or stray you from your path," he said.

The allegations against Albayalde were the latest dark cloud to loom over the national police force, which has largely been enforcing President Rodrigo Duterte's bloody anti-drug crackdown that has left thousands of mostly petty drug suspects dead, alarmed Western governments and human rights groups and sparked complaints for mass murder before the International Criminal Court.

Albayalde headed the police force in Pampanga province north of Manila when 13 of his officers seized a large quantity of methamphetamine, a powerful and prohibited stimulant, in a raid. The officers later faced allegations that they presented a small fraction of the seized drugs in a news conference, possibly to foster their promotion, then hid and sold the rest, with suspicions being fueled when they purchased pricey

Albayalde

SUVs not long after.

Albayalde's men allegedly freed a suspected Chinese drug lord in exchange for a huge bribe then arrested another foreigner, who they presented as the owner of the seized drugs.

Albayalde pointed out that state prosecutors cleared the officers of criminal complaints they had faced for the alleged offenses.

Albayalde said the allegations against him may have been an offshoot of jockeying for the top police post that he would vacate if he has stayed in his post until his retirement. But two police officials, including a general who has retired from the force and is now a city mayor, testified in Senate hearings that Albayalde did not take adequate actions to have his men be criminally prosecuted.

One of the two officials, Aaron Aquino, who now heads the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency, testified that Albayalde called him then to inquire about the status of the cases against his men.

Albayalde acknowledged that as a result of the 2013 incident, he was put on a "floating status," which meant he was transferred to a regional police force without being given any specific assignment or post. Several months after, however, he was appointed as metropolitan Manila police chief and as national police chief in April last year.

"No protest was made on my appointment," Albayalde said. "Implicitly, it may be assumed that the president himself was aware of my appointment to that position."

Asked in recent weeks about the possibility of firing Albayalde, Duterte replied he would allow Ano to make a recommendation to him after an assessment. The wait contrasts with Duterte's outright firing of other government officials accused of corruption and irregularities.

Gas explosion kills 9, injures 10 in east China

BEIJING (AP)—Nine people were killed Sunday in a restaurant gas explosion in eastern China, reported state broadcaster CCTV. The explosion gutted the restaurant and damaged neighboring shops in coastal Jiangsu province's Wuxi city. CCTV reported that 10 others who were injured are in stable condition. Over 200 rescue workers have been dispatched to the scene. An overpass collapsed last week in the same city, killing three people inside a car. Jiangsu was the site of a massive chemical blast in March, when nearly 80 people died in one of China's worst industrial accidents in recent years.

Indian police say 10 killed when house collapses in north

LUCKNOW, India (AP)—Indian police say at least 10 people have been killed after a two-story house collapsed in a village in the country's north. Top state police officer O.P. Singh says another 15 people were injured in Monday's collapse in Walidpur, a village in Uttar Pradesh state. Singh says police are investigating whether the collapse was caused by a cooking gas container exploding in the building. Singh says five people from a single family were killed at the location, while another five succumbed to their injuries in a hospital. Building collapses are common in India during the monsoon season, when heavy rains weaken the foundations of structures that are poorly constructed. Uttar Pradesh and some other Indian states were lashed by heavy rains last month.

Pakistan's PM leaves for Iran, Saudi Arabia to ease tensions

ISLAMABAD (AP)—Pakistan's prime minister is headed to the Iranian capital as part of his country's ongoing efforts to ease tensions between archrivals Iran and Saudi Arabia. A foreign ministry statement says Imran Khan's trip Sunday to Tehran will focus on "peace and security in the region." Khan will meet Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and President Hassan Rouhani. This is Khan's second visit to Tehran this year. He also had a bilateral meeting with Rouhani on the sidelines of the U.N. summit in New York last month. Khan will later travel to Riyadh after his talks with Iranian leaders. Pakistan is closely allied with Saudi Arabia but has tried to maintain a diplomatic balancing act between Riyadh and Tehran.

Turkish forces say they've captured key Syrian border town

CEYLANPINAR, Turkey (AP)—Turkey's military said it captured a key Syrian border town under heavy bombardment Saturday in its most significant gain since an offensive against Kurdish fighters began four days ago, with no sign of relenting despite mounting international criticism.

Turkish troops entered central Ras al-Ayn, according to Turkey's Defense Ministry and a war monitor group. The ministry tweeted: "Ras al-Ayn's residential center has been taken under control through the successful operations in the east of Euphrates" River. It marked the biggest gain made by Turkey since the invasion began Wednesday.

The continued push by Turkey into Syria comes days after President Donald Trump pulled U.S. forces out of the area, making Turkey's air and ground offensive possible, and said he wanted to stop getting involved with "endless wars." Trump's decision drew swift bipartisan criticism that he was endangering regional stability and risking the lives of Syrian Kurdish allies who brought down the Islamic State group in Syria. The Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces was the main U.S. ally in the fight and lost 11,000 fighters in the nearly five-year battle against IS.

Turkish troops and allied Syrian opposition fighters have made gains recently capturing several northern villages in fighting and bombardment that left dozens of people killed or wounded. The invasion also has forced nearly 100,000 people to flee their homes amid concerns that IS might take advantage of the chaos and try to rise again after its defeat in Syria earlier this year.

The Syrian Democratic Forces, or SDF, said the United States should carry out its "moral responsibilities" and close northern Syrian airspace to Turkish warplanes, but that it didn't want the U.S. to send its soldiers "to the front lines and put their lives in danger."

During a meeting Saturday in Cairo, the 22-member Arab League condemned what it described as "Turkey's aggression against Syria" and warned that Ankara will be responsible for the spread of terrorism following its invasion. The league said Arab states might take some measures against Ankara.

It called on the U.N. Security Council to force Turkey to stop the offensive.

The Turkish offensive was widely criticized by Syria and some Western countries, which called on Turkey to cease its military operations.

France's defense and foreign ministries said Saturday that the country was halting exports of any arms to Turkey that could be used in its offensive.

Foreign Minister Heiko Maas also announced that Germany would curtail its arms exports to Turkey. Maas told the weekly Bild am Sonntag that "against the background of the Turkish military offensive in northeastern Syria, the government will not issue any new permissions for any weapons that can be used by Turkey in Syria."

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said Friday that Turkey won't stop until the Syrian Kurdish forces withdraw at least 32 kilometers (20 miles) from the border.

During the capture of Ras al-Ayn's residential center, an Associated Press journalist across the border heard sporadic clashes as Turkish howitzers struck the town and Turkish jets screeched overhead. Syrian Kurdish forces appeared to be holding out in some areas of the town.

The SDF released two videos said to be from inside Ras al-Ayn, showing fighters saying that it was Saturday and they were still there.

The fighting was ongoing as the Kurdish fighters sought to reverse the Turkish advance into the city, according to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, a British-based war monitor.

Ras al-Ayn is one of the biggest towns along the border and is in the middle of the area where Turkey plans to set up its safe zone. The ethnically and religiously mixed town with a population of Arabs, Kurds, Armenians and Syriac Christians had been under the control of Kurdish fighters since 2013. IS members tried to enter Ras al-Ayn following their rise in Syria and Iraq in 2014 but failed.

US pulling out of northern Syria; full withdrawal possible

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States appears to be heading toward a full military withdrawal from Syria amid growing chaos, cries of betrayal and signs that Turkey's invasion could fuel a broader war.

Defense Secretary Mark Esper said Sunday that President Donald Trump had directed U.S. troops in northern Syria to begin pulling out "as safely and quickly as possible." He did not say Trump ordered troops to leave Syria, but that seemed like the next step in a combat zone growing more unstable by the hour.

Esper, interviewed on two TV news shows, said the administration was considering its options.

"We have American forces likely caught between two opposing advancing armies and it's a very untenable situation," Esper said.

This seemed likely to herald the end of a five-year effort to partner with Syrian Kurdish and Arab fighters to ensure a lasting defeat of the Islamic State group. Hundreds of IS supporters escaped a holding camp amid clashes between invading Turkish-led forces and Kurdish fighters, and analysts said an IS resurgence seemed more likely, just months after Trump declared the extremists defeated.

The U.S. has had about 1,000 troops in northeastern Syria allied with the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces to combat IS. The Pentagon previously had pulled about 30 of these troops from the Turkish attack zone along the border. With an escalation of violence, a widening of the Turkish incursion and the prospect of a deepening conflict, all U.S. forces along the border will now follow that move. It was unclear where they would go.

The Pentagon chief did not say U.S. troops are leaving Syria entirely. The only other U.S. presence in Syria is at Tanf garrison, near Syria's eastern border with Jordan.

The U.S. and coalition troops there are not involved in the Kurd mission, and so it seems highly unlikely the 1,000 being moved from the north would go to Tanf.

Critics say the U.S. has betrayed the Kurds by pulling back in the face of Turkey's invasion, but Esper said the administration was left with little choice once President Recep Tayyip Erdogan told Trump a week ago that he was going ahead with a military offensive. Esper said the Kurds have been good partners, "but at the same time, we didn't sign up to fight the Turks on their behalf."

The Kurds then turned to the Syrian government and Russia for military assistance, further complicating the battlefield.

The prospect of enhancing the Syrian government's position on the battlefield and inviting Russia to get more directly involved is seen by Trump's critics as a major mistake. But he tweeted that it shouldn't matter.

Ecuador indigenous, president strike deal to end protests

QUITO, Ecuador (AP)—President Lenin Moreno and leaders of Ecuador's indigenous peoples struck a deal late Sunday to cancel a disputed austerity package and end nearly two weeks of protests that have paralyzed the economy and left seven dead.

Under the agreement announced just before 10 p.m., Moreno will withdraw the International Monetary Fund-backed package known as Decree 883 that included a sharp rise in fuels. Indigenous leaders, in turn, will call on their followers to end protests and street blockades.

"Comrades, a deal is compromise on both sides," Moreno said. "The indigenous mobilization will end and Decree 883 will be lifted."

The two sides will work together to develop a new package of measures to cut government spending, increase revenues and reduce Ecuador's unsustainable budget deficits and public debt.

"The moment of peace, of agreement, has come for Ecuador," said Arnaud Peral, the United Nations' resident coordinator in Ecuador and one of the mediators of the nationally televised talks, which started about 6 p.m. "This deal is an extraordinary step."

Wearing the feathered headdress and face paint of the Achuar people of the Amazon rain forest, the president of the Confederation of Indigenous Nations, Jaime Vargas, thanked Moreno and demanded improved long-term conditions for indigenous Ecuadorians.

"We want peace for our brothers and sisters in this country," Vargas said. "We don't want more repression."

Protests over the austerity package have blocked roads, shuttered businesses from dairies to flower farms and halved Ecuador's oil production, forcing a temporary halt to the country's most important export.

In a shift from the heated language of the last 10 days of protests, each side at the negotiations praised the other's willingness to talk as they outlined their positions in the first hour before a short break.

Other indigenous demands included higher taxes on the wealthy and the firing of the interior and defense ministers over their handling of the protests.

"From our heart, we declare that we, the peoples and nations, have risen up in search of liberty," Vargas said. "We recognize the bravery of the men and women who rose up."

Earlier in the day, hundreds of black-clad riot police drove protesters out of north-central Quito's Arbolito Park, the epicenter of the protests, and into surrounding streets.

The park had filled Friday with mostly peaceful protesters chanting against the government. But by Sunday afternoon the air was white with smoke from burning tires and tear gas after more than 24 hours of clashes between police and hard-core protesters armed with sharpened sticks and shields improvised out of satellite dishes or plywood. Adjoining streets were piled high with burned tires, tree branches and paving stones.

NEW YORK (AP)—So is red meat good or bad for you? If the answer were only that simple.

A team of international researchers recently rattled the nutrition world by saying there isn't enough evidence to tell people to cut back on red or processed meat, seemingly contradicting advice from prominent health experts and groups including the American Cancer Society and American Heart Association.

But the researchers didn't say people should eat more meat, or that it's healthy. No new studies were conducted, and they reported no new understanding of meat's effects on the body. Instead, the papers offer a new approach to giving advice about food and health—and a rebuke to how it's often done.

The dispute lays bare problems with nutrition research long acknowledged in the scientific world: Nutrition studies are almost never conclusive, and whatever supposed risk and benefits there are to any food are often oversimplified.

"People like bumper sticker guidance," said Dr. Walter Willett, a professor of nutrition at Harvard who has led studies tying meat to bad health.

Now health experts are wrestling with how solid scientific findings should be before guidance is issued, how to address biases that might skew conclusions and whether the pleasure we get from eating should be considered.

The scrutiny is likely to spill over to other dietary advice as obesity becomes an ever more critical public health concern, and people become increasingly frustrated with flip-flopping messages.

MEAT TWO WAYS

The papers analyzed past studies on red and processed meat and generally corroborated the links to cancers, heart disease and other bad health outcomes. But they said the chance of any benefit from eating less of them appeared small or negligible.

For every 1,000 people, for instance, cutting back on red meat by three servings a week was linked to seven fewer deaths from cancer. For some other health measures, like strokes, the difference was smaller or nonexistent.

What's more, the researchers said there's little certainty meat was the reason for the differences.

Uncertainty is common in nutrition research. Many studies about food and health are based on links researchers make between people's health and what they say they eat. But that doesn't prove one causes the other. If a thin person loves cereal and eats it

Who says you can't eat red meat?

Food advice questioned anew

In this Jan. 18, 2010 file photo, steaks and other beef products are displayed for sale at a grocery store in McLean, Va. On Sept. 30, 2019, a team of international researchers recently rattled the nutrition world by saying there isn't enough evidence to tell people to cut back on red or processed meat, seemingly contradicting advice from prominent health experts and groups including the American Cancer Society and American Heart Association. But the researchers didn't say people should eat more meat, or that it's healthy.

By CANDICE CHOI
AP FOOD & HEALTH WRITER

nearly every day, for instance, that doesn't mean cereal is the reason they're thin.

Health experts who defend advice to cut back meat say the researchers were applying an unreasonable standard—evaluating the strength of the meat studies with a method intended for medical studies, where a specific dose of drug can be tested under controlled conditions.

With nutrition, they say it's impossible to conduct studies where people's diets and lifestyles are controlled and monitored over long periods. They say the statistical signals they see in nutrition studies are meaningful, and that people should be given guidance on the best available data.

THE PERSON VS. THE POPULATION

If it's true that there would be seven fewer cancer deaths for every 1,000 people who cut back on red meat, then it is also true that 993 of those people would not see that benefit even if they ate fewer burgers.

For many public health experts, the potential for those seven fewer deaths is worth making a broad recommendation to limit meat. Across an entire population, the numbers could add up to many lives saved.

But the question is where to draw the line, and at what point the potential benefit is too small and uncertain to ask people to change their behavior.

The authors also argue the individual being asked to change their behavior should be considered. For those who regularly eat and enjoy meat, cutting back on it may seem drastic if all they are getting in return is small reduction in risk, if any at all.

"Recommendations should consider the values and preferences of people who actually bear the consequences," said Bradley Johnston, lead author of the papers, who specializes in research methodologies.

TILTING THE EVIDENCE

Given the uncertainties of nutrition science, another long-running concern is the potential for findings to be skewed by personal beliefs or financial incentives.

The latest papers were no exception, with critics and supporters each pointing to factors that could have influenced the others' position.

Critics noted Johnston, the lead author, undermined another dietary recommendation in the past. He previously led a study funded by the food industry that challenged guidelines to limit added sugars, which serves the interests of many food companies. That paper initially said the authors independently wrote the plan for the study. After emails obtained by the Associated Press showed the industry group sent "requested revisions," the paper was corrected to say the group reviewed and approved the plan.

Johnston and supporters of the papers countered, saying critics have long advised people to limit meat and could feel the need to defend their position.

The back-and-forth underscores the difficulty of ruling out the biases any researcher is likely to have, given the amount of industry money in nutrition research and the strong beliefs people often have about food.

Meat is an especially polarizing topic, given the animal welfare and environmental consequences that come with it.

That could further confuse people about who or what to believe, or they just focus on research that backs up what they want to believe.

LOST IN TRANSLATION

Wherever researchers stand on meat, there's agreement that the nuances of nutrition science often get lost in translation. Foods are often labeled as good or bad, even when researchers try to be nuanced.

Take red meat. The advice to "limit" it often doesn't specify by how much, which could lead people to think cutting back is good regardless of the context. But in poorer countries, red meat might help improve diets. In richer countries, Willett said the benefits of cutting back would vary depending on what replaces it, and that pizza might not be an improvement.

Still, Willett and others who criticized last week's papers say the many Americans who eat red meat once a day or more could benefit from eating less.

There's no consistent recommendation for an acceptable amount. The American Cancer Society's experts say "a few" servings a week or less. A study by Willett, which also addressed the environmental impact of food, advised a limit of one serving a week.

Public health experts want to give people advice that's easy to communicate. But most acknowledge that doing a better job of conveying nuances and uncertainties could help prevent mistrust and confusion.

SO WHAT SHOULD WE EAT?

Already, the U.S. dietary guidelines have backpedaled on advice to limit total fat, which has been blamed for encouraging people to eat too much pasta and cookies.

In the years since, the guidelines have focused on the saturated fat found in foods like meat, butter and some packaged foods, saying it should be limited to 10% of calories.

As advice around specific foods changes, health experts have increasingly focused on the importance of overall diets. Some note focusing on single foods, which often have a complex mix of nutrients, can also distract from a simpler message: Don't eat too much, since eating more calories than you burn makes you gain weight.

"If everyone would just pay attention to that one, we would solve a lot of problems," said Marion Nestle, a professor of nutrition and food policy at New York University.

AUTO REVIEW:

Ford updates the best-selling F-150 for 2019 with more choices and tech

The 2019 Ford F-150.
TNS

By EMMA JAYNE WILLIAMS
FORT WORTH STAR-TELEGRAM

For 2019, the Ford F-150 pickup from America's truck leader has some exciting upgrades and additions.

Tough, smart and capable, the F-150 has class-leading capability, outperforming others whether hauling cargo in the bed or towing a trailer, making the toughest task look easy on the job or on a fun weekend.

With seven trims available, priced from $28,155 to $67,135, there is an F-150 for any need.

The F-150 is popular with work fleets and offers options such as Ford Telematic Prep to monitor vehicles with GPS tracing and geofencing on a live map, get live vehicle health alerts, set reminders for service or inspection, monitor fuel usage, and monitor driver behavior to help improve safety. Alternative-fuel engines are also available for fleet use.

My F-150 Lariat Supercrew ($47,985) had a second-generation 3.5-liter EcoBoost V-6 engine with start/stop technology, more horsepower (375) and best-in-class 470 foot-pounds of torque.

Improvements include Ford-first port fuel and direct injection with two injectors per cylinder to improve power and efficiency, all-new twin turbos for greater on-demand power, and a more-responsive high-end-efficient 10-speed automatic transmission with Tow/Haul, Snow/Wet, Eco Select, and Sport modes.

The advanced 10-speed transmission brings improved performance and enhanced acceleration compared with the six-speed it replaced, as well as three overdrive gears.

Two-speed automatic four-wheel drive with neutral towing capacity is standard for 4WD F-150s. Shift-on-the-fly allows changing from two-wheel drive to 4WD low or high with the turn of a dial. My Lariat also had automatic 4WD.

Adaptive Cruise Control with Stop-and-Go ($1,250) maintained a set speed and distance from the vehicle ahead, automatically accelerating and braking, even coming to a complete stop in traffic and resuming when traffic resumed. If stopped for more than three seconds, driver intervention is necessary.

My Lariat had most of the basic features and equipment everyone expects, and added lots of packages and options, starting with a Lariat Series package for $7,050 with Blind Spot Information System/Cross-Traffic Alert and Trailer Tow Monitoring (for the trailer as well as the vehicle); remote start system with remote tailgate release; reverse sensing system (detects objects while slowly reversing, an audible signal increases in frequency and volume); LED side-mirror spotlights for working after dark; and a 110-volt outlet.

Also included were a universal garage door opener; leather-trimmed bucket seats — heated/ventilated 10-way driver/passenger seats with power lumbar and memory driver's seat; heated steering wheel; LED fog lights; heated second-row seats; power tilt/telescoping steering column with memory; quad beam LED headlights and taillights; rain-sensing wipers, and windshield wiper de-icer.

The included B&O sound system brought a customized audio experience with specifically tailored speaker placement, tuning, and calibration; monitoring background noise; up to 1,000 watts of power and 10 speakers.

A Lariat Sport Appearance package ($300) added 18-inch, six-spoke machined-aluminum wheels with Magnetic (dark gray) painted pockets, all-season/all-terrain tires, body color grille (Magma Red, deep brownish red with red flecks) with two large bars/four minor bars, black surround and black mesh, body-color bumpers, FX 4WD Off-Road box side decals, bucket seats, chrome single-tip exhaust, and unique interior finish (subtle gray basket-weave design).

Automatic on/off headlights with automatic high beams and daytime running lights worked with the rain-sensing wipers, turning on when the wipers were activated. Two large chrome tow hooks were located near the outer bumper.

The cargo box featured Box Link, a flexible, configurable system to secure accessories such as ramps, storage bins, dividers and much more.

My Lariat had four cleats, locked into place on the bed sides, capable of holding 275 pounds across the box and 600 pounds diagonally.

Standard were four fixed floor tie-downs, a center high-mounted stop light with integrated cargo lamp, LED lights near the tailgate, power tailgate lock, and a power-sliding tinted rear glass with defroster. A spray-in Toughbed bedliner ($595) protected the bed from scratches when I hauled a load to the dump.

Power Deployable Running Boards — one of my favorite features ($995) — extended when a door opened. The twin-panel power moon roof ($1,495) offered a more-expansive sky view.

A Tailgate Step with Tailgate Lift Assist (F-150class-exclusive, $375) extended out from the dropped tailgate; a pushbutton released the apparatus, the step dropped down and a handle pulled out and turned up for grasping — another favorite feature.

An FX4 Off-Road package ($905) prepared the Lariat with hill-descent control, off-road tuned front shocks, skid plates on the fuel tank, transfer case and front differential, and tray-style floor liners. A 3.3liter electronic-locking rear axle was replaced by a 3.55 electronic-locking rear-axle in a Max Trailer Tow Package ($1,295).

The tow package also brought a 36-gallon fuel tank, auxiliary transmission oil cooler, engine oil cooler, Pro Trailer Backup Assist with Tailgate LED, integrated trailer brake controller, upgraded front stabilizer bar, and upgraded rear bumper.

The 3.5-liter EcoBoost engine is required with this package, along with max springs. A Smart Trailer Tow Connector, Class IV trailer hitch receiver, four-/seven-pin wiring harness, and Trailer Sway Control are standard on the Lariat.

Trailer Backup Assist helps guide the trailer by turning a knob in the desired direction to let the truck steer itself. A Smart Trailer Tow Connector, part of the rearview camera, features a black line in the center that turns in the direction of the steering wheel to help position the hitch to the trailer.

Power-folding, Power Scope telescoping, power dual-glass tow mirrors with heat, turn signal, memory, auto-dimming (driver's side), high-intensity LED security approach lamps, and LED spotlights with black skullcaps added $250.

A Technology package ($1,195) included a 360-degree camera with split-view display, Active Park Assist and Lane-Keeping System. Active park helps identify a suitable parking space, then helps steer the truck into the space while the driver controls acceleration and braking.

My Key technology allows programming of the key to limit top speed, remind front seat passengers to fasten seat belts with a chime and by muting the radio, block Sirius XM stations (five-year subscription included) labeled "explicit," and provide an earlier low-fuel warning. Driving/safety features can't be deactivated, and audio volume can be limited to 44 percent. My Key can assist fleet owners as well as parents to promote good driving habits.

My F-150 Lariat had lots of storage space in the front and rear cabin — multiple pockets on all doors, large shallow dash tray, extra-large console bin with removable tray with coin slots, long shallow console side bins, and a narrow console slot for phone, pen, or other small objects.

Power-adjustable pedals with memory were standard (good for short women who drive trucks). The rear 60/40 bench seat cushions folded up against the back of the cab, increasing the interior cargo area.

Sync3 offered voice-activated communications, entertainment, and information, with an eight-inch screen displaying the most-used features with easy-to-read text and icons. The screen responded quickly to a light tap or swiping/pinching for some features.

A voice-activated touch-screen navigation system with Sirius XM Traffic and Travel Link ($795) increased the functionality of the Sync system.

Ford Pass Connect supplied Wi-Fi for up to 10 devices at once. Multiple power points included two 110-volt outlets, three 12-volt outlets, and four USB ports.

Safety and security were addressed with Pre-Collision with Automatic Emergency Braking, Advance Trac with Roll Stability Control and yaw control (reduces fishtailing), Curve Control, SecuriCode keyless entry keypad (driver's side), SOS post-crash alert system (flashes turn signals, sounds the horn at four-second intervals, and SecuriLock passive anti-theft system (engine immobilizer).

My F-150 Lariat was EPA rated at 17 mpg city/23highway/19 combined. I drove around the neighborhood and on a couple of gnarly gravel/dirt mountain roads and averaged 16.3 mpg. The ride was smooth (on the paved roads).

The Lariat was easy to drive, roomy and comfortable, and controls were easy to reach and use.

With $16,250 total options and $1,595 destination charges, my capable, versatile, loaded 2019 F-150 Lariat FX4 4WD delivered for $65,830.

Matt Lauer rape accuser Brooke Nevils says he is 'victim-blaming' her

By STEPHEN BATTAGLIO
LOS ANGELES TIMES

The former NBC employee who says she was raped by fired "Today" co-anchor Matt Lauer had harsh words for his strongly worded denial of her accusation.

Brooke Nevils, who told investigative journalist Ronan Farrow that Lauer raped her in 2014, said the fallen TV star's open letter that disputed her allegation was an attempt to bully and shame her.

"There's a Matt Lauer that millions of Americans watched on TV every morning for two decades. And there is the Matt Lauer who this morning attempted to bully a former colleague into silence," she said in a statement to NBC News, issued late Wednesday. "His open letter was a case study in victim-blaming. I am not afraid of him now regardless of his threats, bullying, and the shaming and predatory tactics I knew he would and now has tried to use against me."

Nevils alleged that Lauer forced her to have anal sex without her consent in a hotel room in Sochi, Russia, while the "Today" team was covering the 2014 Winter Olympics, according to Farrow's new book "Catch and Kill."

Nevils told Farrow she was drinking heavily the night of the incident. She said she had gone to Lauer's room twice—once to retrieve an Olympics press credential that he had taken as a joke and a second time at his invitation.

Nevils alleged that once she was in Lauer's hotel room, he pushed her against a door and kissed her before pushing her onto the bed and asking her if she liked anal sex. She declined several times, but he "just did it," according to the book. She said she wept into a pillow during the incident.

"It was non-consensual in the sense that I was too drunk to consent," Nevils said in the book. "It was non-consensual in that I said, multiple times, that I didn't want to have anal sex."

Lauer responded with a vivid description of the incident, which he insisted was consensual. He also said he continued an extramarital affair with Nevil for several months after the two returned from Sochi to New York.

"The story Brooke tells is filled with false details intended only to create the impression this was an abusive encounter," Lauer said in his open letter, which was his first detailed statement since NBC fired him almost two years ago for inappropriate sexual behavior. "Nothing could be further from the truth. There was absolutely nothing aggressive about that encounter. Brooke did not do or say anything to object. She certainly did not cry. She was a fully enthusiastic and willing partner. At no time did she behave in a way that made it appear she was incapable of consent. She seemed to know exactly what she wanted to do. The only concern she expressed was that someone might see her leaving my room. She embraced me at the door as she left."

Lauer, the popular co-anchor of "Today" for more than 20 years, was fired by NBC after Nevils went to human resources with a complaint against him in November 2017. Nevils eventually left the network with a seven-figure settlement.

Still working '9 to 5,' Parton marks 50 years at the Opry

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—Country superstar Dolly Parton is still working "9 to 5," and doing what she loves as she celebrated her 50th anniversary as a Grand Ole Opry member.

The 73-year-old actress, singer and songwriter, who first played the Opry when she was just a teenager, played the long-standing radio show Saturday night in Nashville, Tennessee, in front of sold-out crowds. Hank Williams Jr., Lady Antebellum and Toby Keith performed in her honor as well and her shows capped off a week of Dolly-themed performances and events at the Opry.

She joked to reporters before her performance that when the Opry approached her about the anniversary, she told them, "I don't want people to think I'm 50 years old."

The anniversary reminded her of the first time she got to perform at the Opry.

"Well a lot of people think this is my 50th year the Grand Ole Opry," Parton said. "It's actually been 60 because first time I got to sing on the Opry I was 13 years old. And actually Johnny Cash introduced me, I believe. And Jimmy C. Newman had given me his spot."

Parton said she was grateful to still be chasing her dreams and said she's got more film, TV and music projects on the way. The Opry performances will be aired on an NBC special on Nov. 26 and Netflix will air an anthology series based on her songs in 2019.

Prince estate: Trump violated promise not to play 'Purple Rain'

Shortly before President Donald Trump took the stage at downtown Minneapolis' Target Center Thursday night, Prince's "Purple Rain" played—even though his estate asked a year ago that the president stop using the late musician's music.

"President Trump played Prince's 'Purple Rain' tonight at a campaign event in Minneapolis despite confirming a year ago that the campaign would not use Prince's music," Prince's estate said in a tweet Thursday night. "The Prince Estate will never give permission to President Trump to use Prince's songs."

In October 2018, Prince's estate asked that the president immediately "cease all use" of Prince's songs. A spokeswoman for Prince's estate provided an Oct. 15, 2018, letter from a Trump campaign attorney, who wrote that the campaign "will not use Prince's music in connection with its activities going forward."

Prince, a Minneapolis native, died in 2016 at his home in Chanhassen, after an accidental overdose of the synthetic opioid fentanyl. In 1983, he recorded "Purple Rain" live at First Avenue, across the street from Target Center. (Star Tribune-Minneapolis)

'Joker' tops box office again, beats 'Addams Family'

LOS ANGELES (AP)—The first weekend was no fluke: "Joker" is a hit.

The R-rated comic book villain origin story had a phenomenal second weekend at the box office, topping the charts once more over newcomers such as the animated "The Addams Family" and the Will Smith action pic "Gemini Man."

Warner Bros. said Sunday that "Joker" added an estimated $55 million from North American theaters this weekend, bringing its domestic total to $192.7 million.

Not only are the pure grosses impressive, but "Joker" also dropped only 43% from its record-breaking debut.

For comic book films, which are often front-loaded and regularly see second weekend falls that are over 50%, it's a notably small dip. It's also a slightly lower drop than "Wonder Woman" and "Black Panther"—both of which had higher initial openings and went on to have long lives in theaters.

"These are incredible numbers and really reflect how interested and excited people were," said Paul Dergarabedian, senior media analyst for Comscore.

The film had a rollercoaster ride to release, with highs like winning the top prize at the Venice Film Festival, and lows when concerns about the film inciting violence made headlines and prompted increased security at many theaters across the country. But audiences have spoken with their dollars and "were not going to be deterred," Dergarabedian said.

"It shows that content wins. A great movie will rise up above all the noise over whatever controversy or security concerns there were," he added. "You're totally left out of the water cooler conversation if you haven't seen 'Joker.'"

Internationally, "Joker" added $123.7 million from 79 markets, bringing its global

1. "Joker," $55 million ($123.7 million international).
2. "The Addams Family," $30.3 million.
3. "Gemini Man," $20.5 million ($31.1 million international).
4. "Abominable," $6.2 million ($15 million international).
5. "Downton Abbey," $4.9 million ($4.1 million international).
6. "Hustlers," $3.9 million ($3.9 million international).
7. "Judy," $3.3 million ($1.6 million international).
8. "It: Chapter Two," $3.2 million ($2.3 million international).
9. "Jexi," $3.1 million.

total to $543.9 million after just 12 days in theaters.

"Joker's" second weekend success played well alongside the counterprogramming of the kid-friendly "Addams Family," which exceeded expectations and came in a strong second with $30.3 million.

United Artists Releasing distributed the film from MGM and BRON Creative that features the voices of Oscar Isaac, Charlize Theron and Bette Midler. "The Addams Family" defied middling reviews (43% on Rotten Tomatoes) and benefited from a marketplace with relatively few family friendly options in theaters right now, aside from "Abominable" which is now in its third weekend.

The ambitious, star-driven "Gemini Man" was not so lucky. The visual effects-heavy Ang Lee film about an assassin on the run from a younger version of himself (both played by Smith using state of the art de-aging technology) opened in third place with only $20.5 million. Even Smith's disastrous "After Earth" had a better debut ($27.5 million).

Reviews were overwhelmingly poor (it's currently at 26% on Rotten Tomatoes) but "Gemini Man" also had the "Joker" factor to contend with, which may have contributed to the disappointing opening, according to Dergarabedian.

"Gemini Man" was not a cheap endeavor either. The film from Paramount and Skydance cost a reported $140 million to make after rebates and will have a difficult time breaking even.

Rounding out the top five were "Abominable," with $6.2 million, and "Downton Abbey," with $4.9 million.

In limited release, Bong

Joon-Ho's "Parasite" had an extraordinary weekend, earning $376,264 from only 3 locations. Its $125,421 per theater average is a record for 2019.

"It's amazing how well ('Parasite') did. It's one of the biggest stories of the weekend," Dergarabedian said. "That per theater average means that those movie theaters were full. The demand far outweighed the supply."

Neon is distributing the class-conscious Korean thriller, which won the Palme d'Or at the Cannes Film Festival earlier this year and is already a massive hit internationally, with over $70.9 million from South Korea alone. With near-unanimous rave reviews, "Parasite" is also expected to be an awards contender and will be expanding in North America in the coming weeks.

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Comscore. Where available, the latest international numbers for Friday through Sunday are also included. Final domestic figures will be released Monday.

Atwood, Ellmann favorites to win fiction's Booker Prize

LONDON (AP) — Booker Prize winner Margaret Atwood is the bookies' favorite to win the coveted fiction trophy again for "The Testaments," her follow-up to dystopian saga "The Handmaid's Tale."

Atwood, who won in 2000 for "The Blind Assassin," is one of six finalists for the 50,000-pound ($63,000) prize, whose winner will be announced Monday.

British bookmakers also give strong odds to British-Turkish author Elif Shafak for the Istanbul-set story "10 Minutes 38 Seconds in This Strange World" and U.S.-

British writer Lucy Ellmann for her 1,000-page stream-of-consciousness novel "Ducks, Newburyport."

The other contenders are Salman Rushdie for "Quichotte," a modern-day retelling of "Don Quixote"; Britain's Bernardine Evaristo for "Girl, Woman, Other"; and Nigeria's Chigozie Obioma for "An Orchestra of Minorities."

Founded in 1969, the prize is open to English-language authors from any country.

Scorsese says he's open-minded about Netflix film revolution

LONDON (AP)—Martin Scorsese said Sunday he's keeping an open mind about the cinema "revolution" sparked by the rise of video streaming services, as his Netflix-backed mafia epic "The Irishman" closed the London Film Festival.

The director said the rise of streaming platforms was "an even bigger revolution than sound brought to cinema" because it "opens up the original conception of what a film is" and how it should be seen.

Scorsese told reporters he thought it was still important that movies be experienced communally.

"Homes are becoming theatres too but it's a major change and I think one has to keep an open mind," he said.

"The Irishman"—about the reflections of a former Jimmy Hoffa associate and hitman—is due to have a theatrical run from Nov. 1 before its Nov. 27 release on Netflix.

Scorsese took the project to Netflix after other studios turned it down, partly due to its length and the expensive de-aging digital effects used to make stars Robert De Niro, Al Pacino and Joe Pesci appear decades younger.

Scorsese said the CGI effects, which have come in for some criticism, were simply "an evolution of makeup."

"You accept certain norms in make-up—you know he's not that old, she's not that young," he said. "You accept the illusion."

The 209-minute film is Sunday's closing night gala for the 12-day London festival.

On Saturday the festival awarded its best film prize to Colombian director Alejandro Landes' child soldier thriller "Monos."

The first feature prize went to French director Mati Diop's Senegal-set drama "Atlantics," and the documentary award was won by Rubika Shah for "White Riot," the story of the 1970s British movement Rock Against Racism.

"Fault Line" by Iran's Soheil Amirsharifi won the short film trophy.

Mississippi hometown to honor late Temptations singer

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP)—One Mississippi city promises there will be sunshine on Oct. 26, even if it's a cloudy day.

That's the day Meridian will honor the late David Ruffin, one of the lead singers of the Motown group The Temptations. He sang the hit "My Girl," that included that sunny lyric.

The Meridian Star reports the city will add signs ceremonially naming four blocks of a downtown street "David Ruffin Boulevard."

Born in nearby rural Whynot, Ruffin claimed Meridian as home.

Mississippi's Arts + Entertainment Experience will also place Ruffin's star on its walk of fame, while Jackson State University's marching band, the "Sonic Boom of the South," will lead a parade.

LaMont Robinson, head of the National Rhythm & Blues Hall of Fame and Ruffin's son-in-law, presented the idea to Meridian.

Happy smartphone user stops short of becoming an addict

DEAR ABBY: I have a smartphone, and I love its convenience. I check my email, texts and voicemail three or four times a day and always try to respond promptly. But I do not carry my phone with me every moment of the day.

Some family members insist that the polite thing to do is to return a text message or voicemail IMMEDIATELY. They carry their phones with them and constantly interrupt whatever they are involved with to answer the phone, send a text, etc.

For my birthday, one relative gave me a little pouch on a string so I could wear my phone around my neck wherever I went because she texted me one day early in the afternoon saying she wanted to drop by, but I didn't see or respond to it until dinner time. Is making oneself available every moment of the day and night now required for good manners?

NOT A PHONE ADDICT

DEAR NOT AN ADDICT: Of course not! A cellphone is not supposed to be a leash. Your relative has become hooked on the concept of instant gratification, which isn't healthy for either of you. If you humor her, your cellphone will become an annoying and unending inconvenience for you. Do not take the bait.

DEAR ABBY: My father recently purchased a truck for our farm. It's old and in poor shape, but it was worth the $2,000 he paid for it.

The truck was fine until my father used it to pick me and my siblings up from school. When the other kids saw the bumperless truck, they began calling my little brother "Farmer Boy" and made cow noises at us. My mother isn't OK with it either. He picked her up from work in it, which embarrassed her in front of her co-workers.

It's not like we don't have other vehicles. Both my parents have nice, functional cars. Abby, please help me figure out a way to tell my dad without hurting his feelings.

FREAKED OUT IN FRANKFORT, KY.

DEAR FREAKED OUT: People should not be judged because of the clothes they wear or the vehicles they drive, but sometimes they are by shallow people who should know better. I think you could get your message across by telling your father how your brother's classmates reacted when they saw him pick up your brother. What they did was cruel. Leave it up to your mother to tell him she felt embarrassed in front of her co-workers. I'm sure she can get the message across.

DEAR ABBY: My wife was sexually active with a classmate in high school. Their relationship lasted until shortly before we were married, 54 years ago. I have often wondered what he did to make her so willing to come to his bed. Perhaps if I knew,

I could enhance her pleasure in our lovemaking. However, such information might be injurious to our relationship. What is your take on this? I think about this several times each day.

OBSESSED IN THE WEST

DEAR OBSESSED: You have, I hope, been happily married for more than half a century. Has it never occurred to you that her high school romance failed because the sex wasn't that great? CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: Dominic West, 50; Vanessa Marcil, 51; Emeril Lagasse, 60; Sarah Ferguson, 60.

Happy Birthday: Look back before you move forward. Rely on experience to help you avoid attracting individuals who will not treat you properly. Building a home base that is conducive to achieving the goals you set will be the most important factor moving forward. Discipline and having trust in your ability will be required. Believe in yourself, and you'll thrive. Your numbers are 8, 15, 21, 24, 30, 38, 46.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Something that looks good will tempt you, but before you make a move, be observant and consider the consequence of your actions. Don't let someone's bragging make you feel you are missing out or have less.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take charge and bring about the changes necessary to advance. Look at your relationships, and consider the changes that will enhance the connections you have with others. Letting go of whatever holds you back is long overdue.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep your secrets to yourself. If you reveal personal thoughts to someone in confidence, you will end up being disappointed. Put your energy into physical fitness, tidying up unfinished chores or an exciting challenge. Don't buy into someone else's scheme.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can make a difference if you use your intelligence to help someone in need. Your perspective will shine a new light on a stagnating problem. Don't let anger take over when fixing what's broken is all that's required.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take care of business. If you spend your time pontificating instead of physically getting things done, you will face criticism as well as disappointment. Don't let someone outmaneuver you by taking over and getting all the credit. Take pride in what you do.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Consider your options, and start the ball rolling. How you handle situations, people and partnerships will make a difference in the outcome. Show kindness and consideration, but don't lose sight of your goal. A change will be useful for you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Sign up for whatever sparks your interest. Live, learn and associate with those who push you forward instead of holding you back. Be a doer and a leader, not a follower. Make positive changes that will encourage saving and nurturing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learn by observing others, talking to experts or engaging in events that challenge you to use your mental and physical skills. Be bold, try new things and make personal changes that excite you. Romance is featured and will enhance your life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Refuse to let someone manipulate you. If something seems far-fetched, go directly to the source and ask for details. Take care of responsibilities first, or someone will point out your shortcomings. Don't reveal secret information.

EUGENIA LAST THE LAST WORD IN ASTROLOGY

COPYRIGHT 2007 UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stay focused on what you want to achieve. You've got the right combination to balance both home and work responsibilities, so don't let a petty incident interfere with what's important. A strong suggestion will encourage more significant support. Make romance a priority.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take a closer look at your assets, and see if your budget will withstand an expense you've been considering. Refuse to let anyone talk you into something you cannot handle financially, emotionally or physically. Practicality and a minimalist attitude are warranted.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take a different approach to the way you handle your money, a legal matter or health issues. Ask an expert for advice, but make a decision based on what you feel you can handle. Romance is encouraged, and a commitment looks promising.

Birthday Baby: You are protective, diligent and secretive. You are sensitive and insightful. Visit Eugenialast.com, or join Eugenia on Twitter/Facebook/LinkedIn.

Walk-off homer hands Astros win in Game 2

HOUSTON

(AP)—Carlos Correa hit a leadoff home run in the 11th inning and the Houston Astros won a battle of the bullpens, beating the New York Yankees 3-2 Sunday night to tie the AL Championship Series at one game apiece.

The slumping Correa, who earlier hit an RBI double and made a sensational play at shortstop, connected for an opposite-field shot to right off J.A. Happ.

Correa watched the ball sail, then held up one finger as he rounded the bases. As he approached home plate, he tossed his helmet as if shooting a basketball at the crowd of teammates waiting for him.

Game 3 is Tuesday afternoon at Yankee Stadium. Gerrit Cole, who is 18-0 in his last 24 starts and led the majors in strikeouts, starts for the Astros against Luis Severino.

“The game of baseball, it’s a beautiful game,” Correa said.

The Yankees tied a League Championship Series record by using nine pitchers. The eight relievers had permitted only one run and two hits with 11 strikeouts before Correa homered, ending a game that took 4 hours, 49 minutes and ended right around midnight.

Houston’s five relievers combined for 4 1/3 innings of one-hit shutout ball after taking over for Justin Verlander. Going into this best-of-seven series, the Yankees were considered the better team in the bullpen — the Astros amply held their own in this one.

“Our bullpen was nasty, gave us a chance to win the game,” Correa said.

Gary Sánchez struck out looking to end the Yankees 11th with runners on first and second. The pitch appeared outside—it came right after he swung and missed with two strikes, but was ruled a foul ball.

New York lost for the first

AP
Houston Astros’ Carlos Correa hits a walk-off home run against the New York Yankees during the 11th inning in Game 2 of the American League Championship Series Sunday, Oct. 13, 2019, in Houston.

Correa hit an RBI double in the second off James Paxton, who lasted just 2 1/3 innings.

Hours later, Correa ended it with his drive off Happ.

“I’ve been successful before going the other way against him,” Correa said. “I was looking for something down the middle that I could drive the other way. He threw a perfect pitch to do it.”

In a game decided by bullpens, it was quite a relief for Correa.

“Not playing a couple of weeks before the playoffs and then not producing for or my team offensively, obviously it’s tough, getting hurt and everything,” he said. “But it’s all worth it for moments like this, moments like this where you give your team a chance to win every day, it’s worth it, man.”

“I’ll be working really hard, really hard to get healthy, get back with my teammates. You don’t know what it’s like,” he said. “It’s been a tough road this year but I’m finally here and I was able to contribute tonight.”

time this postseason after four wins.

“It was a struggle tonight,” Yankees manager Aaron Boone said. “They’re tough to score runs off, especially on a night when Verlander is out there.”

Aaron Judge hit a two-run homer off Verlander that put the Yankees ahead 2-1 in the fourth. George Springer tied it in the fifth with a home run on the first pitcher after reliever Adam Ottavino entered.

Correa was sidelined for a while late this year because of back trouble. The All-Star began the day in a 3-for-22 skid this postseason.

Along with his bat, he made the key play in the field to keep it tied at 2 in the sixth. With runners at first and second, and on the move on a full-count pitch with two outs, Brett Gardner hit a hard grounder that bounced off second baseman José Altuve for a single.

The ball bounded away and Correa quickly retrieved it and threw a strike to catcher Robinson Chirinos, who tagged out the sliding DJ LeMahieu.

“I just tried creeping over and as soon as the ball hit him, I scooped it and he sent him, so I had to gun him down,” Correa said.

Nationals looking invincible in NLCS

ST. LOUIS—They know how baseball works, so they will stop well short of calling themselves invincible.

Instead, the Washington Nationals have performed at such a high level in these playoffs that they have rendered themselves practically unbeatable.

A franchise that 11 days ago was just four outs away from adding to its not-good-enough postseason history has instead taken a tiny opening in a wild card game and burrowed its way to within two victories of the World Series — while rendering the St. Louis Cardinals thoroughly punchless.

Saturday afternoon at Busch Stadium, Max Scherzer followed in the footsteps of Game 1 starter Anibal Sanchez and carried a no-hitter into the late innings of a National League Championship Series’ Game 2. Like Sanchez, the no-hitter didn’t last, but the Nationals won.

As they always do these days. Scherzer struck out 11 Cardinals in his 7 1/2 innings, but for as great as he and Washington’s starters have been, it was the other end of their ledger that was more telling.

Scarcely used center fielder Michael A. Taylor popped a go-ahead, third-inning home run. No. 2 hitter Adam Eaton turned a one-run game into an eighth-inning extra base hit.

And the Nationals claimed a 3-1 victory that gave them a 2-0 NLCS edge on the Cardinals, with Game 3 at Nationals Park on Monday night.

Sure, they’ll start another ace in Stephen Strasburg, who will battle Cardinals No. 1 man Jack Flaherty. But at this point, kismet may matter as much as Ks for a team that has won six of eight playoff games since facing a 3-1, eighth-inning deficit in the NL knockout match against Milwaukee.

They roared back to win that game and survived two elimination games against the mighty Dodgers.

And now?

“There’s this weird feeling that comes over the dugout, comes over the bullpen, in the sixth, seventh inning of games,” says Nationals reliever Sean Doolittle, who recorded seven crucial late-inning outs in Games 1 and 2. “When the game is close, the game is hanging in the balance, we’re finding ways to push runs across, like we did last night, like we did today.”

It’s the exact opposite of this team’s identity in May, when their bullpen beyond Doolittle was in tatters and a 19-31 start appeared to doom them.

At that point, they’d suffered 11 losses when blowing a lead in the seventh inning or later.

Now? They own the eighth inning—a three-run rally to topple the Brewers 4-3, a two-homer salvo to erase another 3-1 deficit against the Dodgers in the decisive NLDS Game 5, and two runs Saturday that proved decisive.

Overall, they are 80-40 since May 23 (a .666 clip), including 6-2 this postseason.

One sample size is massive. The other is small. But both square with what’s unfolded on the field—and with what’s now at stake.

“When you catch a break like we did in the wild-card game, you start to feel like,” says Doolittle, before pausing and perhaps catching himself, “... you start to play with so much confidence, because you never feel like you’re out of a game.”

“When our starting pitching is doing what it’s been able to do, giving us a chance to win every night, going deep into games, I feel like everybody’s playing with this calm confidence that we’re going to find a way to win.”

Schilling eyeing Phillies, Red Sox coaching job

Curt Schilling, who hasn’t thrown a pitch since the 2007 World Series but has since become one of the sport’s most polarizing figures for his right-wing political views, wants back in the game.

Schilling, a staunch supporter of President Donald Trump, has often spoken about entering the political arena but instead is ready to throw his hat into the world of baseball.

Schilling wants to interview for the Philadelphia Phillies’ managerial vacancy after the firing of Gabe Kapler. He says he is also interested in the Boston Red Sox’s pitching coach opening.

“I think it’s one of the few openings since I left that I ‘fit,’” Schilling told USA TODAY Sports in a text message of the Phillies job. “I know the city. I know the fans and I know the expectations.”

A six-time All-Star, three-time World Series champion and three-time Cy Young runner-up, Schilling pitched nine years for the Phillies. He later won a World Series championship with the Arizona Diamondbacks, and two more with the Boston Red Sox.

“The media,” he says, “won’t be an issue.”

Oh, yeah, the news media. The same group whose lynching Schilling applauded when he re-tweeted an image that read: “Rope. Tree. Journalist.” Schilling said at the time it was “100% sarcasm.”

Schilling joined the news media in 2010 after retiring in 2007, working as an analyst for ESPN. He was fired in 2016 after sharing a Facebook post related to the North Carolina transgender law.

Schilling shared a photo of a man wearing a wig and women’s clothing, with parts of the T-shirt ripped to show his chest. Next to the photo, it read: “LET HIM IN! to the restroom with your daughter or else you’re a narrow minded, judgmental, unloving, racist bigot who needs to die!!!”

Watson outduels Mahomes in Texans' win over KC

KANSAS CITY, Mo.

(AP)—Deshaun Watson threw for 280 yards and a touchdown while running for two more, outdueling Chiefs counterpart Patrick Mahomes in a matchup of former first-round picks and leading the Houston Texans to a 31-24 victory over Kansas City on Sunday.

Carlos Hyde added 116 yards rushing and a touchdown against the team that traded him to Houston (4-2) before the start of the season. DeAndre Hopkins hauled in nine passes for 55 yards.

None was bigger than his last, when the Texans star made a sliding grab on fourth-and-3 from the Kansas City 27 with just under 2 minutes to go. That allowed Houston to run out the clock and deal the Chiefs (4-2) their second consecutive loss—both at Arrowhead Stadium.

Mahomes, who was selected two spots ahead of Watson in the 2017 draft, finished with 273 yards passing and three touchdowns, though he also threw his first interception of the season.

Star wide receiver Tyreek Hill returned to action for the first time since Week 1, when he broke his collarbone, to catch five passes for 80 yards and two of the Chiefs' scores.

Seahawks 32, Browns 28

In Cleveland, Chris Carson scored on a 1-yard touchdown run with 3:30 left, Russell Wilson threw two TD passes and ran for one and Seattle rallied past mistake-prone Browns, improving to 3-0 on the road for the first time in 39 years.

The Seahawks (5-1) gave up touchdowns on Cleveland's first three possessions before storming back.

Wilson connected with Jaron Brown for two scores, and Seattle's cool quarterback scampered 16 yards for a TD. The Seahawks last won their first three road games in 1980, when they went 4-12.

The Browns (2-4) were hurt by their own miscues. They couldn't overcome four turnovers, a blocked punt or quarterback Baker Mayfield's hip injury and fell to 0-3 at First-Energy Stadium.

Mayfield threw three interceptions, raising his NFL-leading total to 11.

Saints 13, Jaguars 6

In Jacksonville, Teddy Bridgewater found Jared Cook for a 4-yard touchdown early in the fourth quarter, and New Orleans held on to beat the Jaguars and improve to 4-0 without injured starter Drew Brees.

Coming off a 300-yard,

Houston Texans quarterback Deshaun Watson (4) is tackled by Kansas City Chiefs cornerback Kendall Fuller (29) during the first half of an NFL football game in Kansas City, Mo., Sunday, Oct. 13, 2019.

four-touchdown performance against Tampa Bay, Bridgewater was less effective against the Jaguars (2-4). But he did enough for New Orleans' defense.

Gardner Minshew was sacked twice, hurried often and threw his first interception as a starter. The rookie sensation completed 14 of 29 passes for 163 yards and was held without a touchdown for the first time this season.

Bridgewater was 24 of 36 passing for 240 yards for the Saints (5-1).

49ers 20, Rams 7

In Los Angeles Jimmy Garoppolo passed for 243 yards and ran for a touchdown, and San Francisco remained unbeaten with a dominant defensive performance against the struggling Rams.

George Kittle had eight catches for 103 yards for the Niners (5-0), who held Los Angeles' once-unstoppable offense to 157 yards in coach Kyle Shanahan's first victory over Rams coach Sean McVay in a game in which both of these NFC West rivals were playing their starters.

These longtime coaching colleagues' teams are going in opposite directions after this one-sided showdown at the Coliseum. San Francisco used its possession offense and a sturdy defense to stay alongside New England as the NFL's only unbeaten teams, while the Rams (3-3) are on their first three-game losing streak of McVay's 2½-year tenure.

Tevin Coleman rushed for an early touchdown for San Francisco, while Garoppolo was mostly effective despite two turnovers. The Niners didn't score a touchdown in the final 27 minutes, but they're off to their fourth 5-0 start in franchise history, and their first since 1990.

Jets 24, Cowboys 22

In East Rutherford, Sam Darnold gave the Jets' struggling offense a huge boost by throwing two touchdown passes in his return from mononucleosis, and New York held on to beat Dallas for its first win of the season.

The Jets led 21-9 in the fourth quarter, but Dak Prescott and the top-ranked Cowboys offense stormed back—and had a chance to tie in the closing moments.

Prescott ran for a 4-yard touchdown with 43 seconds left, making it a two-point game. Going for the tie, Prescott dropped back and was quickly met by a blitzing Jamal Adams and his pass on the conversion try fell short of Jason Witten in the end zone.

The Cowboys (3-3) tried an onside kick, but Demaryius Thomas recovered for the Jets (1-4), who won for the first time under coach Adam Gase. It was the third straight loss for Dallas.

Darnold finished 23 of 32 for 338 yards—including a 92-yard touchdown toss to Robby Anderson and a 5-yarder to Ryan Griffin.

Vikings 38, Eagles 20

In Minneapolis, Kirk Cousins threw to Stefon Diggs for three of his four touchdowns, racking up a season-high 333 passing yards as Minnesota ravaged Philadelphia's secondary.

Diggs scored on plays in the first half that covered 51 and 62 yards, becoming the first player since Randy Moss in 2000 to post two touchdown receptions of 50-plus yards in one game for the Vikings (4-2).

His most important catch came late in the third quarter, a double toe tap in the back of the end zone from 11 yards out that pushed the lead to 11 points after Carson Wentz and the Eagles (3-3) had pulled within 24-20 with 17 straight points.

Cousins went 22 for 29 with one sack and one interception on a deflected ball.

The Eagles have been badly missing starting cornerbacks Ronald Darby and Avonte Maddox, and Cousins took full advantage with a first half that looked at times like passing drills against the scout team.

Ravens 23, Bengals 17

In Baltimore, Lamar Jackson ran for a career-high 152 yards and a touchdown, threw for 236 yards and guided the Ravens past hapless Cincinnati.

Jackson carried 19 times, including three kneel-downs, and finished tantalizingly short of Michael Vick's single-game record of 173 yards rushing by a quarterback.

Jackson now has three career 100-yard rushing games, tied with Billy Kilmer for most by a quarterback in his first two seasons since 1950.

Regardless of where Jackson went, the Bengals (0-6) were usually a step behind. Jackson was also adept when throwing, going 21 for 33 without an interception.

Cincinnati jumped on top when Brandon Wilson took the opening kickoff 92 yards for a score, but Jackson responded quickly.

Panthers 37, Buccaneers 26

In London, Christian McCaffrey scored two touchdowns and Carolina turned five interceptions by Jameis Winston into 17 points as the Panthers beat Tampa Bay.

After starting the season with two straight losses with hobbled Cam Newton at quarterback, the Panthers (4-2) have been on a roll with Kyle Allen at quarterback thanks to McCaffrey's big plays and an opportunistic defense that had a franchise record-tying seven takeaways on the day.

Both of those factors came up big on Carolina's first trip to London in front of a large contingent of Panthers fans for what was designated as a home game for the Bucs (2-4).

Redskins 17, Dolphins 16

In Miami Gardens, rookie

Terry McLaurin caught two touchdown passes and Washington stopped the Dolphins' two-point conversion attempt with 6 seconds left in a matchup between winless teams.

Adrian Peterson more than doubled his season rushing total with 118 yards for Bill Callahan in his first game as interim coach. Washington intercepted Josh Rosen twice and sacked him five times before he was benched at the start of the fourth quarter with the Dolphins trailing 17-3.

Rosen's replacement, Ryan Fitzpatrick, sparked a rally and led two touchdown drives, including a 75-yard march that began with 2:02 left.

Broncos 16, Titans 0

In Denver, the Broncos' swarming defense sent Marcus Mariota to the bench and Tennessee to its fourth loss in five games.

The Broncos (2-4) had seven sacks in a game for the first time since their 2015 Super Bowl season and they picked off three passes.

Chris Harris Jr. and Justin Simmons intercepted Mariota, who was sacked three times and was replaced by Ryan Tannehill after Simmons' interception led to a 2-yard touchdown run by Philip Lindsay that made it 13-0. Tannehill was sacked four times and picked off by Kareem Jackson on Tennessee's final drive, which reached the Denver 5-yard line before two offensive penalties and a sack pushed the Titans back to the 30-yard line.

Cardinals 34, Falcons 33

In Arizona, Kyler Murray threw for 340 yards and three touchdowns and Arizona built a big lead over Atlanta, lost it, and then rallied to win.

Atlanta looked like it would tie the game with 1:53 left after Matt Ryan hit Devonta Freeman on a 12-yard touchdown pass, but 44-year-old Matt Bryant missed left on the extra point, and the Cardinals ran out the clock from there.

The Cardinals (2-3-1) took a 34-27 lead with 5:12 remaining on David Johnson's 14-yard touchdown catch from Murray. Johnson made a great adjustment to his route on the slightly underthrown ball, catching the ball between two defenders.

George to miss Clippers' first 10 games

LOS ANGELES—We are expecting not to see Paul George on the court with Kawhi Leonard in a Los Angeles Clippers uniform until November. But until this week, we didn't have a good idea about when George could return over the course of the next month.

Speaking to reporters this week, Clippers head coach Doc Rivers let it slip that George could miss up to the first 10 games of the regular season. That would put George at a tentative return date of Nov. 13 against the Houston Rockets.

The Clippers are still expected to be one of the best teams in the NBA, and the real question heading into the first several weeks of the season will be how much they allow Leonard to sit out due to load management if George is not on the floor.

The real question in Los Angeles—on both sides of the hall at Staples Center—will be about health, and the Clippers know that it's not how you start the season but how you finish. It seems likely they will wait until George is fully ready to return to action rather than rushing him back from dual shoulder surgery.

Meanwhile, the moment could have called for a light practice. This marked a forgettable weekend on which most would rather relax and watch college football.

These moments could define the Los Angeles Clippers' NBA championship chances, however. Perhaps as much as Kawhi Leonard and George. So Rivers held a full-court scrimmage.

"I love them," Rivers said.

Most coaches love scrimmages during training camp. It raises the competition. It helps coaches sort out the depth chart. Once the regular season starts, Rivers often stopped them during his time coaching in Orlando (1999-2003), Boston (2004-2013) and Los Angeles (2013-present) to save his players' legs for games that actually matter. Rivers has changed his strategy for this season, though.

Just like he did when the Boston Celtics acquired Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen in separate offseason deals to pair with Paul Pierce in 2007-08, Rivers plans to hold scrimmages frequently through the Clippers' upcoming season. And why not?

The Clippers landed Leonard and George this summer. Rivers has varying starting lineups and bench rotations to evaluate. After logging 11 minutes in the Clippers' preseason loss to Denver on Thursday, Leonard might sit out for Sunday's matinee against Australian team Melbourne United.

Lastly, after having offseason surgery that will sideline him at least through November, George could use that scrimmage time to shed his expected rustiness.

"I'm all for this team doing that," Rivers said. "I think it's a little different because Paul George is not going to be here for the first 10 (games), so that's going to be a little harder to do."

Rivers said those words in passing. The Clippers also have yet to release a designated timetable on George's return. But if Rivers' estimation holds up, George would not return until Nov. 13 against the Houston Rockets. He would miss marquee games, such as the season opener in a designated home game against the Lakers (Oct. 22) and the Golden State Warriors' season opener in San Francisco (Oct. 24).

Rockets focused on basketball after fallout from GM's tweet

TEXAS—The Rockets are back home in Houston, looking to leave behind the distractions from their trip to Asia.

Their two games in Japan were overshadowed by the aftermath of a tweet by general manager Daryl Morey in support for anti-government protesters in Hong Kong, angering fans and officials in China.

In their first practice since returning, the Rockets insisted they wouldn't let the fallout distract them from preparing for the season.

"Guys can handle it," coach Mike D'Antoni said. "We still got good work in. Everything's fine, but you know what happened (is) regrettable, and it happened, but as I said, our work will get done."

Veteran P.J. Tucker denied that dealing with this situation has been a distraction to this team trying to contend for its first title since winning back-to-back championships in 1994-95.

"Not really, honestly," he said. "This time of season, everybody's getting in shape, getting ready for the season, focusing in. So with all of the things that go on in life, and whatever, this is still our job, so we still come in and do our job every single day."

The Rockets were in Hawaii on Oct. 4 to play a preseason game against the Los Angeles Clippers on the first leg of a trip that included two games in Japan when Morey tweeted an image that said: "Fight For Freedom. Stand With Hong Kong." His tweet was in reference to pro-democracy demonstrations in the semiautonomous Chinese territory that has been mired in escalating violence between protesters and law enforcement.

The tweet was deleted soon after it was posted, and Rockets owner and billionaire casino and restaurant owner Tilman Fertitta quickly rebuked his GM with a tweet saying that Morey does not speak for the team. He added: "Our presence in Tokyo is all about the promotion of the NBA internationally and we are NOT a political organization."

Despite the swift response from Fertitta, the damage was already done. Former Rockets star Yao Ming took offense to Morey's support for the anti-government protesters and as president of the Chinese Basketball Association, suspended its ties to the Rockets over the tweet.

Events in China promoting the Lakers-Nets series were canceled, NBA media partner Tencent said it was evaluating its plans to cover the league, and China state broadcaster CCTV did not air either preseason game.

The tweet also caused some Chinese corporations to suspend relationships with the NBA and it is unclear what can be done to mend the relationship.

D'Antoni was asked if there is anything the coaches and players can do to help repair things with China.

"We've just got to keep playing and keep trying to be good ambassadors for the game, that's all the players can do," he said. "And then we'll let the NBA and the Houston Rockets sort things out."

Morey hasn't spoken publicly since the tweet, with his only comments on the issue coming in two more tweets on Oct. 6. In those tweets he did not apologize for his initial tweet but did say that his tweets "in no way represent the Rockets or the NBA."

NBA Commissioner Adam Silver backed Morey's right to express his opinion and said: "We are not apologizing for Daryl exercising his freedom of expression."

Morey was at the Toyota Center on Sunday but did not speak to reporters and was not at the small portion of practice that media was permitted to attend. While Morey stayed out of the spotlight it was up to the players and D'Antoni to address how the Rockets can move past what happened.

the association, its presence in the Commonwealth, and its efforts to building capacity for the CNMI to ensure that future generations will have the opportunity to enjoy the marine resources available today.

"It is our intent and mission to provide education, as well as incorporate knowledge to our youth so that they become greater stewards of our islands and its resources," said Weaver. "As we continue to use what we have, we will need to ensure that we establish a sustainable way to fish and how to protect our oceans."

Presenters from the Micronesia Islands Nature Alliance and the Division of Fish and Wildlife provided students with lessons on how they can be a part of protecting marine resources. Both MINA and DFW have been a part of the SFA's outreach program since June of this year, and continue to be an avid SFA partner to reaching out and educating the community.

The DFW will also be presenting on the fish species around the islands and share information regarding species present on Saipan. It is essential for SFA's new young fishermen/women to be aware of these edible and non-edible species as they embark on an eight-month program with the SFA.

"We intend to share our knowledge with the youth," added Weaver. "SFA believes in mentoring the youth through its assets. These include skill sets on various fishing techniques: trolling, shallow bottom, shoreline casting, net fishing (talaya), and deep drop."

Also, more women are now involved with fishing, according to SFA member Vicky Benavente, adding that fishing is no longer just a man's thing to do. Benavente encourages more young women to get involved in the SFA Youth Fishing Club, to stay active, and be a part of the community.

SFA Outreach Program coordinator Alex Castro Jr. said the SFA Youth Fishing program will run for about eight months and will encompass not only the ideology of the various fishing techniques, but also self-imaging, skills on CPR and first aid, and boating safety do's and don'ts.

Despite her late preparations, newcomer Jordan Monderen still managed to win in the Figure Division of the 2019 Dee Clayton Classic Bodybuilding and Fitness Championship held last Saturday at Pacific Islands Club Saipan.

The Latte Built Fitness staff was ecstatic with her victory in her first appearance in the DC Classic and recalled the late and tough preparations she had to go through.

"I started a little late to the show so I wasn't expecting it (win) at all. I had a lot of amazing support, so it was good. This is my first competition and I've always wanted to try something like this. I was a little scared for the bikinis and high heels but finally, I was like whatever, that's just an excuse so I just had to push past it," Monderen said.

Monderen added that the months of training was fun, although she found giving up her sugar gravings the hardest part of the preparations.

"The training was fun, but once it got closer to the end, it became more difficult especially since I love sweets. This morning was also hard because the prejudging was a little rough for me. I didn't know the rules and stuff like that, but overall, it was an amazing experience," she said.

After her winning debut, Monderen said she plans to participate again in the DC Classic.

the first four innings and allowed their foes to score only in the third.

The Bears made three runs apiece in the first and second inning and added five in the third for a promising 11-0 advantage after three and a half innings. Leftfielder Ricardo Dela had back-to-back sacrifice flies in the first and second inning to bring in Henry Lizama, Jr. before the former reached in the third off Koby Lifofoi's single.

Designated hitter A.J. Lizama had a pair of singles in the first three innings to go with his two RBIs and two runs, while Kiku Lizama went 3-for-3 and contributed three runs in the Bears' strong start. Fred Songao chipped in two runs, while Jose Lizama Jr. added one.

As for the Blue Jays, they bungled their chances to hit the board at the bottom of the first inning, as after loading the bases, Bears starting pitcher J.J. Lizama struck out Froilan Camacho and Auriel Mendiola. The Blue Jays also had a chance to score in the second inning with Cabrera walking and moving to second and third off the Bears' fielding errors. However, Cabrera was left stranded at third when Koby Foreman was caught stealing second.

After being frustrated in the first two innings, the Blue Jays finally reached, thanks to Camacho's two-run single at the bottom of the third. Jess Mesa made it three in a row for the Blue Jays when he singled, advanced to second and third off the Bears' errors, and then stole home to keep his team in the game, 3-11.

However, that was the closest that the Blue Jays could get, as the Bears tightened their defense in the remainder of the game, shutting down their foes while adding five more runs to cap the semis sweep.

With the Bears back in the finals, they are now waiting for the winner in the Go See Mark-Mariners semis showdown. The finale will be a best-of-five affair.

Mariners 6, GSM 4

The Mariners moved closer to joining the Bears in the championship series after edging GSM in Game 1 of their semis duel.

The Mariners played steadier in the homestretch, scoring four runs in fifth and sixth inning and withstanding GSM's rally at the top of the seventh.

The opposing teams were in a deadlock after four and a half innings, 1-1 with Nate Smith reaching off an error for the Mariners in the second and GSM's Franco Nakamura stealing home at the top of the fifth for the equalizer.

At the bottom of the fifth inning, the Mariners quickly regained the lead, 4-1, with Jon Villagomez blasting a two-run double and Nate Camacho scoring off K.J. Deleon Guerrero's single.

Then at the top of the sixth, GSM cut the deficit to 2 when J.J. Sablan reached off Nakamura's sacrifice fly, but the Mariners got the one run back, as Pat Tenorio made it home off their foes' miscue at the bottom.

Still behind, 2-5, GSM made one final push for a comeback at the top of the seventh and last inning and had some successes. Lancaster Secharmidal scored off Vince Cepeda's single and the latter also reached on a base on ball with two outs and the bases loaded, boosting GSM's bid to steal Game 1.

However, the Mariners got the needed stop and pushed GSM on the brink when Nate Camacho, who came in for Jonah Flores late in the sixth inning, fanned Nakamura for the third out.
